Our illustration gives a faint idea of the beauty and grace of this new Maidenhair; it is entirely distinct from all other varieties, and even more graceful than A. gracillimum, and possessing the advantage of having much stouter, stiffer stems, on account of which it forms more shapely plants, and increases its value for cutting purposes. Specimens of this handsome sort shown at the exhibitions of the Penna. Hort. Society during the past two seasons attracted the attention of all lovers of Ferns. Strong, 4-inch pots, 35 cents each; $3.50 per dozen.

Montbretia Crocosmiæflora Germania.

This new giant Montbretia has been under our observation for the past four years. It grows about 3½ feet high, is of sturdy habit, much branched, and produces most graceful spikes in the greatest profusion. They are well furnished with large six-petalled, widely expanded flowers, measuring over 3 inches across, probably the largest of the genus. The color is a rich glowing scarlet, shading to brilliant orange, with a blood-red throat. The buds and also the reverse of the petals are blood-red, a most striking combination of colors, making a grand effect. 20 cents each; $2.00 per dozen; $15.00 per 100.

Montbretia Germania.

Cactus Dahlias, Aezir, Loreley and Strahlen Krone.

Introduced by us last year, are three gems, and no collection is complete without them. Strong roots, 15 cents each, $1.50 per dozen; $12.00 per 100.

Twelve Choice Japanese Tree Paeonias.

We can supply twelve of the finest Japanese varieties in strong heavy plants, 80 cents each; $5.00 per dozen.

Yucca Filamentosa Bicolor.

This elegant plant has proven entirely hardy with us the past winter. We offer good, one-year-old plants, 35 cents each; $3.50 per dozen.

Our new Quarterly Trade List which has only recently been distributed, offers a complete line of all the leading novelties, together with a full line of seasonable stocks, with full lists of our specialties, as Decorative Plants, Water Lilies and Aquatics, and the most complete list of Hardy Perennials offered in this country. A PRE-EASTER RAMBLE.

With Robert Craig.

It was a glorious morning, clear and crisp, with scarce a touch of spring's mildness in the air, when I reached my destination. First came a chat with William P., who seemed to feel that a point of difference between Andrew Carnegie and himself was that while the steel king voluntarily rained libraries, he was obliged to rain papers. Every member of the club will agree with me in my support of the chairman of our essay committee: the papers were good and, like Oliver Twist, we ask for more.

Now, the man who taught me the possibilities in this business of hard work and slow advancement, but that is full of absorbing interest, appeared and we are off to see his place.

Five houses full of Japan grown lilies in grand shape, and, most important, on time. There are single stems, double stems, three stalks and four stalks to a pot, all well feathered and hard as nails. Several houses of azaleas follow, the feature of interest being the loose, graceful appearance of some of the plants, a departure from the Belgian closely trimmed type, which the buyers should encourage as they did the bouquet of today when it fought for supremacy with the stiff camellia centered bunch of our forefathers.

Then came some acacias and six plants of miniature cherries in pots, trimmed in true Japanese style and ready to burst into flower.

Spirea astilboides was well done in single plants. I missed the quartette in 10-inch pans, last year's novelty. Then Crimson Rambler roses, unusually shapely, the surface looking like an azalea crown, full of buds. Hydrangeas were there, well set with buds, and the first detachment of bulbs in pans, timed for the greatest event of the year to the church and the florist.

The morning was finished with a run up to "Will's," where, as his father truly said, the carnations are exceptionally well done. PHIL.

SOME STORIES.

During a discussion upon bedding plants at a recent meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club a reference to the treatment plants often receive after they have been delivered to the buyer brought out some good stories.

Mr. Buettner told of an azalea that was delivered in fine condition at the kitchen door of a residence and the next day he was sent for to explain why the plant had no leaves or flowers left. On investigation he found that the cook, fearing the plant had been chilled during delivery, had set it on the stove awhile to take the chill out.

He told of another lady whose azalea was not doing well and who gave assurance that instructions had been carefully followed. She had not failed to "water it every day." He called and found the plant in a copper jardiniere and the water nearly to the top. She could not have watered it but once or twice more with safety to her carpets.

He had filled a vase of plants and the next day on going by discovered the coachman playing a heavy stream of water on the plants with all the force he could give it. He was so angry he went in and punched the coachman's nose, which seems a very effective way of conveying a hint.

This reminded Edwin Kanst of a story of a man-of-all-work who was discovered playing the hose upon plants in the manner described by Mr. Buettner. When called down he responded: "You can't tell me anything about handling a hose. I was in the fire department for three years."

Referring to the azalea incidents, Mr. McAdams said they sent with each plant a printed slip giving explicit instructions as to what to do and what not to do.

Worcester, Mass.—The first exhibition of the year of the Worcester County Hort. Society brought out a fine display March 14. Cinerarias, cyclamens and the bulbous stock was especially fine.

EDWARD B. JACKSON, Stamford, Conn.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.

The recent action of Prof. Scott, state entomologist of Georgia, in prohibiting the shipping of nursery stock from Tennessee into Georgia has been the cause of considerable discussion among the nurserymen of this state. A bill has been prepared and will be presented to the general assembly to create the office of state entomologist to inspect the nurseries of this state. N. W. Hale, of this city, is chairman of the committee having this bill in charge.

Prof. Scott's action did not precipitate this movement, as the initiative was taken by the appointment of that committee at the meeting of the East Tennessee Horticultural Society in September. Mr. Hale, in speaking of the proposed bill, said:

"At present, the state of Tennessee has no officer or law to protect the nurseries. The nursery stock in Tennessee is as free from disease as that of Georgia, but the action taken by Prof. Scott was merely carrying out the provisions of the Georgia law. This provides that no state shall be allowed to ship nursery stock into Georgia without its being inspected. The University of Tennessee has been making inspections, but as there is no law to protect them, these have been discontinued. This is what precipitated the action of Prof. Scott. All the large nurseries of Tennessee favor the passage of this bill and have requested that such be done. Unless it is passed in a short time our state will be debarred from doing nursery business with several other states, while other states can unload all their diseased stock on Tennessee."

A NEW FERN.

W. H. Hoffmeister, Fort Madison, Ia., sends us a photograph of a group of plants of a seedling nephrolepis that he found among his ferns some time ago. It is similar to the Boston fern and Mr. Hoffmeister reports that it is a rapid grower and makes fine specimens in a very short space of time.

BOWLING.

Respectfully submitted to [illegible] O'Mara, John Wescott, G. Asmus, F. Daillebouze, Phil Scott, A. Graham, F. Hitzinagle, J. J. Beneke, and the bowling cranks at large.

It may not be generally known that there is very little of the sporting element in my make-up, but in spite of that I was elected president of the National Florists' Bowling League, an honor that I greatly appreciate. There is lately received an intimation or suggestion from some cities that a three-man team would be a good inovation in our bowling tournament. There are several ways of looking at this.

Some will say there is not time. This could take the place of the individual roll, and again the six-man teams need only roll two games, which is the usual number in all tournaments. The fact is, our bowling is a recreation evolved and sustained for the greatest amount of fun for the greatest number, and six men, or rather six good bowlers, is more than several cities can muster. They could furnish three good men, but not six. I will offer no suggestions, but this one, viz., that cities that were represented by six men would be debarred from entering a three-man team. Think it over, you enthusiasts, and let us have your opinion either through these pages or by letter.

THE GOOD & REESE CO.

The Largest Rose Growers in the World. SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

AN EMPLOYES' ASSOCIATION.

I am more than pleased to notice that "Employe" has taken up Mr. Herman Knope's subject in a much more practical form, which is several strides forward. Brief discussion can be of little benefit, but I believe that if an association can be organized and the members discuss the matter exhaustively (for is it not an industrial problem like any other labor question?), the results would be of inestimable benefit to all concerned.

Now that the subject is under discussion I, for one, trust that the opportunity will not be allowed to pass without something definite being done. Were some organization established on a broad basis, as it ought to be, employes could benefit themselves and others in a thousand and one ways that may not at once be seen. I would suggest that those who are in a position to do so form a club, inviting Chicago employes to become visiting members and all employes out of Chicago to become members by correspondence. The corresponding members would, I believe, give life to the main body. Should this not be practical how would it answer to establish a two or three page journal for employes through which a proper and full exchange of thought could be had?

Employers themselves would, I am sure, be working in their own interests by encouraging such a movement.

W. K.

[Certainly there should be no difficulty in forming such an organization if there is any real desire for it among employes. W. K. could start the work by consulting a number of other employes and formulating a call for a meeting, attaching to the call the names of those who favored the project. And at the meeting the details of effecting an organization could be arranged in accordance with the views of the majority. The suggestion regarding a journal is, we fear, going a little too far, at least for the present. It costs a good deal of money to issue even a modest journal, and the expense might swamp the treasury. THE REVIEW will willingly give space to a report of the proceedings of the association if organized, and no doubt the other trade papers would do likewise. And if any really general interest is developed THE REVIEW will give the employes a page of their own every week.—Ed.]

Permit me, through the columns of your paper, to indorse the remarks made by "Employe" in the REVIEW of the 21st, and I hope that his idea will be carried out. I would be pleased to give it my support, and I think every one who takes an interest in his work should do the same.

ANOTHER EMPLOYE.

I like the idea of an Employes' Association and hope the project will go through. I shall certainly be a member if it is organized.

THE GEO. WITTBOLD CO., 1657 BUCKINGHAM PLACE, CHICAGO.

CHESTNUT HILL, PA.

The regular meeting of the Chestnut Hill Horticultural Society was held on the evening of March 12th, President John T. Morris presiding. Wm. Kleinheintz, gardener to P. A. B. Widener, Ogontz, Pa., read a very thorough paper on carnation growing, taking up in detail the propagating, planting and care of stock, as well as the varieties he finds most satisfactory.

The following premiums were awarded: Three cinerarias—first, to Geo. Robertson; second, to Geo. Morrison. Three cyclamen—first, to Geo. Robertson. One plant of Deutzia gracilis—first, to Geo. Robertson. One azalea, not over 8-inch pot—first, to Michael Punch, Germantown; second, to Hans Reuter. Vase of twelve double daffodils—first, to Robt. Forrest, Jenkintown, Pa.; second, to John Little. Vase of twelve single daffodils first, to Wm. Boyce. Vase of twelve Bride roses—first was awarded to a very handsome vase which was exhibited by Wm. Robertson. This same exhibitor also took first with a vase of Bridesmaid. Wm. Kleinheintz being second. John Little won first on a collection of vegetables stored for winter use, Geo. Robertson being second. Best three heads of lettuce—prize was taken by Harry Harris. For two heads of cauliflower—premium was taken by Wm. Robertson, and Robert Forrest secured the first award on collection of vegetables grown under glass. Special premium was awarded to Hans Reuter for an exceptionally good collection of flowering plants, including azaleas, orchids and cypripediums. Special premium was also awarded to James Bell for two vases of violets; these were not called for on the premium list, but were exceptionally fine.

In addition to these, a number of growers sent carnations as follows: A handsome vase of fifty Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson was received from Peter Fisher. This bunch was admired by all and certainly showed it had been grown by a master in the art; though having been shipped a long way, the blooms were in good condition. The same can be said of a vase of fifty Queen Louise sent by J. Dillon of Bloomsburg. This is certainly a good variety and appears to be an excellent keeper.

Mr. Ward, of the Cottage Gardens, Queens, Long Island, sent a very fine collection, including the following: J. H. Manley, Governor Roosevelt, Viola Allen, Mrs. Lawson, Novelty, Harry Penn, Marquis, Golden Beauty and Morning Glory. Of this lot, Governor Roosevelt, Mrs. Lawson, Marquis and Morning Glory showed to advantage, while J. H. Manley and Novelty seem to be extra good varieties.

Messrs. Crabb & Hunter, Grand Rapids, Mich., sent their Irene, but, unfortunately, the shipment was not received until the following day. This is a flower of exceptionally good color, of good size, and seems to be a good keeper. The writer regrets that these blooms were not received in time for the exhibition.

At this meeting there was an attendance of 93, of whom 64 were gardeners. We feel that this showing augurs well for the success of the society during the coming year. Schedule for the fall show, which will be issued shortly, will contain special premiums to the amount of about $200 and also a silver cup. These items are in addition to the regular premiums which will be offered by the society.

POTATOES AND CELERY.

Extracts from a paper on "Gardening for Exhibition," read before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Boston, by Herbert R. Kinney.]

I have raised potatoes of fair quality and smoothness on very heavily manured market-garden land, but they are not a crop that re-ponds to heavy manuring. To grow the best and handsomest potatoes possible I would use no manure the year the potatoes are planted, but from 1,000 to 2,000 pounds of good fertilizer per acre, about one-half broadcast and one-half in the drill, thoroughly mixed, using large seed cut to two-eye pieces, and planted the 1st of May in drills 18 to 22 inches by 30 to 42 inches apart (the latter distances for the late varieties). Give thorough cultivation and plenty of Paris green and Bordeaux mixture, and you should have potatoes of the best quality.

As to celery, if you would have a shouldered head of nice proportions and not too tall, the plants must be set ten or more inches apart; but if you want nice celery for family use or market, from four to six inches should give a more satisfactory crop. To get celery of the best quality it must be grown rapidly, and it is quite important that it should take an extra start when we begin to blanch it. Celery that is banked with earth gets this start from the cutting of the roots, and the chance that those roots which are left get to work up into the soft earth of the bank. Perhaps the best way to start golden celery that is to be boarded is to give a good watering and work the ground about the time the boards are set up. This gives celery of fair quality; but no method will give as good celery in the early fall as can be produced later when the weather becomes cooler. Celery grown in this way will not keep so well as that of poorer quality.

SEEDS—Continued.

Burpee's Earliest of All is the Sweet Pea for florists. Notwithstanding their dwarf habit and neat slender foliage, the plants are of vigorous growth and come into bloom always ten days to two weeks in advance of the Extra Early Blanche Ferry, which has been heretofore a week ahead of all other varieties. The flowers are as large as those of the regular strains of Blanche Ferry, and have long stout stems, making them entirely satisfactory for cutting, they are borne in close clusters of three, all facing one way. The standards are a bright, rich pink, while the wings are nearly pure white. Burpee's "Earliest of All" is not only the earliest to bloom in open ground but is also the most desirable for forcing under glass for winter cut flowers. The dwarf habit of this variety renders it much more easily grown on the benches, admits of closer planting, and from seed sown during the latter part of August blooms may be cut during the holidays, while with the taller varieties no blooms could be had before February or March. Per pkt. 5 cts., oz. 6 cts., ¼ lb. 20 cts; per lb. 60 cts., 5 lbs. or more at 55 cts. per lb.

VERMONT PLANTS.

Some interesting statistics of Vermont plants are sent out from the Vermont experiment station. These figures are taken in part from the new flora of the state, published by the Vermont Botanical Club.

According to this publication there are now 1,563 species of ferns and flowering plants known to occur uncultivated in Vermont. Of these, 79 species are of trees, including 11 species of oak, seven kinds of maple, six poplars, four pines and four birches. These are mostly useful, but there are 80 species of weeds, some of which are pernicious and promising trouble.

Out of the present census of 1,563 species, 270 have moved into the state since the country was settled. Many of them have come mixed with agricultural seeds, or have been introduced directly or indirectly by artificial means. A large proportion of these newcomers are importations from Europe, and only a minority of 60 or less have come to Vermont from other states or from Canada.

A QUARTER CENTURY'S PROGRESS.

By Patrick O'Mara.

Read before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

The phenomenal progress made in horticulture during the past few years may well supply a theme for the essayist, provide food for thought to those engaged in its development, and prove an interesting study for those even remotely connected with it. While horticulture generally has made great strides forward, the most pronounced progress has been made in floriculture, particularly in the growing of cut flowers to supply the great rushes during the winter season. It is in this particular branch of floriculture that American horticulture can justly claim pre-eminence over all others, and although the scope of this paper is not limited to this alone, a review of it will form the principal part. So pronounced is the advance in greenhouse construction, in methods of growing, in business methods, in the varieties of roses, carnations, chrysanthemums, geraniums, cannas and other flowering plants, that the progress may be well termed evolution. Coincident with the advance made in growing, and equally pronounced, is the great change in the retail stores; in fact, much of the change in the growing must be credited to the enterprise of the retailer.

My first actual contact with the great New York cut flower market was in the winter of 1874-75. It seems incredible in these days that one man carrying flowers in a basket, with a boy to help on busy days, and the use of a horse and wagon at Christmas and New Year's, would dispose of about $35,000 worth of flowers annually, but such was the fact. A large basket, such as was in general use to carry cut flowers then would hold an amazing lot of flowers. La Paetole, Lamarque, Safrano, Isabella Sprunt, Bon Silene and Douglas roses, cut with stems about a foot long in the extreme, did not take up much room; carnations picked short and a few perhaps on stems about six inches long; double white primula picked short, Stevia compacta, bouvardias, abutilons, bunches of heliotrope, Chorozema varia, Lilium candidum, Euphorbia Jacquiniflora, tuberoses, lily of the valley, eupatorium, allamanda, begonias, Dutch bulb stock, Jasminum grandiflorum, calla, violets, sweet alyssum, mignonette, clerodendron Balfouri, Eucharis Amazonica, leaves of Cissus discolor, smilax, leaves of Pelargonium Madame Pollock, rose geranium leaves, fern fronds, anything and everything in the shape of flowers could be sold in the early part of the last quarter century. The camellia was in the market when I first began, but was rapidly passing away. It is interesting to note that the camellia was much in evidence among the flowers used at the funeral of the late Queen of England, and that there is every evidence of a revival in them. Thus do fashions change, and the favorite of today may be the despised outcast tomorrow. Orchids, with the exception of Cypripedium insigne, Dendrobium nobile, Bletia Tankervillia or Phaius grandifolius, Persisteria elata and zygopetalum, were practically unknown, and only a few of these found their way to market—mainly from private collections.

It was about 1875 that the first decided groundswell in the coming evolution in floriculture was felt. All eyes were being turned toward the rose; the varieties then being grown were far from satisfactory. Larger flowers and a better grade were demanded and the supply was forthcoming. The growers of Madison, N. J., began sending in Cornelia Cook, and a great sensation it was! General Jacqueminot was artificially rested and forced into flower, the buds bringing from $1 to $2 each. William Francis Bennett and Pierre Guillot were tried in an effort to provide the desired red rose in winter and failed. Souvenir de Wootton made its appearance and held its own until the growers realized the needs of Meteor, which has since held the field until challenged by Liberty, to which it has not yet relinquished it. Souvenir d'un Ami was unable to hold its place against the grand Catherine Mermet and the day came when her fair daughter, Bridesmaid, drove the parent from the market. The Bride, another daughter of Mermet, quickly drove Cornelia Cook and Niphetos into obscurity. Perle des Jardins eclipsed Marechal Neil, and Sunset, daughter of Perle, had her day only to retire into obscurity even before the parent. About 1885 the American Beauty was ushered in. This grand rose has surpassed the most sanguine predictions of the prophets, and up to the present time is without a rival. One daughter, American Belle, has passed on, but another and fairer daughter, Queen of Edgely, has made her debut, and whether she can move in the same orbit has yet to be determined. Mme. Hoste, Mme. Cusin, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Belle Siebrecht, Mme. Caroline Testout, La France, Souvenir de President Carnot, each have had their day; some of them are having it still, but a comparatively small day it is. Papa Gontier has gone too. Kaiserin Augusta Victoria is one of the varieties which has come to stay. Mme. de Watteville, Mme. Pierre Guillot, Mme. Capucine, Duchess of Albany, Puritan and Waban, from which much was expected, file past in our memories.

Next in importance to the rose as a cut flower comes the carnation. The development of the carnation in this country is distinctively American. The varieties in use have been raised here, the methods of culture have been perfected here. From Hinsdale to Prosperity; Portia to America, G. H. Crane and Jubilee; from Pres. de Graw to Lizzie McGowan, Flora Hill, Alaska and White Cloud; from La Purite to Tidal Wave, William Scott and Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson; from Miss Joliffe to Daybreak; from Charmer to Mrs. George M. Bradt and Olympia; from Astoria to Buttercup and Gold Nugget; from Rosy Morn to Ethel Crocker, the Marquis and Genevieve Lord; from Crimson King to General Maceo, General Gomez, Egypt and Governor Roosevelt—these indicate the giant strides made, but tell little of the patient, intelligent efforts of the hybridizers. It is a record of which American horticulturists may well feel proud.

The violet, that other important member of the cut-flower family, has grown in importance with the others, but its history does not contain as much interest as does that of the rose or carnation. The chrysanthemum, which forms a bright spot in the cut-flower market, exhibits one of the most wonderful efforts in American horticulture to develop and popularize a particular flower. To Mr. John Thorpe is due much of the credit for this. The exhibitions in New York beginning in 1886, also in Philadelphia and Boston, the importation from Japan of the collection containing Mrs. C. H. Wheeler and other good sorts, the importation in 1888 containing Mrs. Alpheus Hardy and other valuable varieties, importations from England and the continent, the rapid production of seedlings of pronounced merit here, all combined to set afloat on the sea of popular favor the glorious "Queen of Autumn." It is highly creditable to our cultivators that well among the best varieties in the world today are found varieties raised here.

Now let us glance at the evolution in the plant trade. It is today divided into, say, five sections—the catalogue trade, the carnation rooted cutting trade, which is a branch really of the cut-flower trade; the market florist near the large cities, who grows soft-wooded flowering and ornamental foliaged bedding plants for market and cemeteries; the grower of decorative plants, such as palms, for the city retail florist; and the florist in the smaller cities and towns who supplies a local trade almost exclusively.

The first mentioned is perhaps the most important and the most interesting. The men engaged in it have to decide what to take up and what to drop, and as the majority decide, so it will be in nine cases out of ten. The catalogue man reaches where no florist or seedsman has yet ventured. The development of the catalogue has been wonderful in the extreme. Twenty-five years ago the most ambitious in the country was a book of about one hundred pages, 6x9 inches, in a plain cover and sparsely illustrated. This was a tremendous advance over what was published ten years before. Today the leading catalogue has 194 pages, is a book 8⅛x10¾ inches, has an illuminated cover, six colored plates, colored photographic scenes, every page is profusely illustrated, and ten copies are distributed for one sent out twenty-five years ago. Although I am unable to say how many firms issued catalogues twenty-five years ago, yet I think one hundred would cover them. Today there are about three hundred and fifty in the field. In addition to these we must consider the great number of foreign catalogues sent here; the American trade is no mean item to European houses. Owing to the great variety of stock carried by seedsmen, florists and nurserymen, advertising must take the form of securing distribution for the catalogue. The first, I believe, to advertise a specialty as a vehicle to distribute a catalogue was Peter Henderson with the celebrated moonflower in 1887. He first offered the plant in his catalogue as Calonyction grandiflorum, or "Evening Glory," in 1879, the text dilating on its moonlike flowers. In 1884 the name moonflower was used in the catalogue for the first time; the price was twenty cents then and up to 1887. When it was advertised in the magazines the price was fixed at 40 cents each, and the demand was phenomenal, about 60,000 plants being sold, against 2,000 the previous year. This experiment showed so forcibly the value of a popular and descriptive name and the use of a specialty that the plan was followed by many thereafter with varying success. The use of the appellation "Ostrich-Plume Chrysanthemum" for Mrs. Alpheus Hardy, and of "The Memorial Rose" for Rosa Wichuraiana were equally productive of results. But many overshot the mark, and some of the alleged popular names were not descriptive and were meaningless in their application. The offering of a money prize for a suitable name was the natural outgrowth of the first principle, and for a time was a potent agent in attracting customers. All these are interesting as manifestations of the evolution of American horticulture. The catalogue trade in plants, influenced no doubt by the cut-flower market, is given up largely now to roses, chrysanthemums, carnations, etc. Twenty-five years ago there was a larger collection of plants offered than today. This is somewhat to be regretted. The greenhouses on large private places are mainly devoted to growing cut flowers instead of collections of stove and greenhouse plants. For this reason they are not so interesting to visitors, nor even to the owners, and a return to the former vogue would be an improvement.

The period which we are contemplating saw the rise, the climax and the partial fall of the ornate bed, involved design, and carpet system of outdoor bedding. That it was carried to excess is undeniable. It is questionable taste to show prize fighters and elephants in ornamental beds of plants. Butterflies could be tolerated, flags are not out so far as ships that do not sail and railroad trains that never go can only be regarded as monstrosities in lawn decorations. This school of gardening was vigorously attacked in the house of its friends by William McMillan at the convention of the Society of American Florists in 1889. At the World's Fair in '93 it was conspicuous by its absence. The pendulum swung too far the other way there, the reaction came, and we are promised some ornamental bedding at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo this year.

The Society of American Florists, formed in 1884, brought about a concentration of effort otherwise impracticable if not impossible. A trade press was established through which intelligence was disseminated. The annual meetings brought men together and ideas were exchanged, rivalry was fostered, and ambition received a spur. Florists' clubs and gardeners' associations have sprung up in all the large cities. We have the Rose Society, the Dahlia Society, the Florists' Hail Association and the Florists' Protective Association. New plants are officially registered; printed labels are in general use in the shipping trade; hotels and private residences are bowers of exotic plants; one may order in New York to have flowers delivered in Paris, London or Berlin. These are a few of the milestones in a quarter-century's progress. In that period we have seen introduced the Bermuda lily, the Crozy cannas and their seedlings; we have seen roses propagated during the summer and distributed by millions and tens of millions by mail and express; we have seen the home grower successfully compete in budded roses with the foreigner; cheap and good land with energy plus have beaten cheap labor; we have had Asparagus plumosus and prengeri; we have had the Crimson Rambler rose; we have seen the bay trees dot our streets; we have seen great botanic gardens like the Bronx brought into being; we have seen the wonderful development of the Arnold Arboretum, the Metropolitan system of parks in Boston, have seen the Back Bay Fens converted from a swamp into a garden, and here I desire to say that in all which tends to the advancement of horticulture along its best and broadest lines, the Massachusetts Horticultural Society has played and is playing a most prominent part. The Boston fern has impressed itself on the horticulture of the day. Begonia Gloire de Lorraine has appeared, and this reminds me of how much we owe to Lemoine, Bruant and other foreign hybridizers for improved heliotropes, syringas, begonias, fuchsias, pelargoniums, chrysanthemums, roses, etc. There are other plants which signalize the quarter-century, but I feel that I have penned enough to show the progress made.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

Largest Trained Chrysanthemum:—We have seen plants of 5 feet to 6 feet in diameter at the shows of the National Chrysanthemum Society, and plants grown in Japan of 9 feet in diameter have been figured in this journal. The Japanese are clever cultivators, and plants of very large size are obtained by grafting branches of one or several varieties on to those of a mother plant, and thus extending it laterally on a fence or an indefinite length.

Marguerites:—The grubs in the leaves of your Marguerites are the maggots or mining larvæ of a fly, Phytomyza nigricornis. It will be best to remove those leaves which are worst disfigured, the maggots in the other leaves may be crushed between the thumb and finger. Spray your plants occasionally with a solution of Quassia, which will make them less tasteful to the female Phytomyza that lays her eggs upon the leaves.

Montbretia and Iris Disease:—The spotting of the Flag Iris leaves is caused by a fungus (Heterosporium gracile), which is abundant on the specimen. The leaf-spots so characteristic of this fungus on Iris, are not shown on the Montbretia, where the disease appears as an irregular, dark-colored coating of fungus filaments over all parts of the leaf and stems; spores with the same appearance as those on the Iris, and evidently identical, are abundant. It is, therefore, probable that this fungus already recorded on several genera of Iridæ, also occurs on Montbretia.

Solanum capsicastrum Diseased:—The fungus on the shoots sent is the Tomato-leaf Rust (Cladosporium fulvum). We have previously found it, as in your case, on other species of Solanum. No doubt, as you suggest, forcing treatment has rendered the young shoots susceptible to attack. The fungus is not difficult to check. You say it occurs as yet only here and there; then prune off the parts where it occurs. Spraying with potassium sulphide (½ oz. in each gallon of water) is generally successful with Tomatoes, if begun early; but with your Solanums it might be well to try this strength on a plant or two, to ascertain whether it does damage to the foliage, if so, more water must be added. If the same house, or a Tomato-house, is to be used next year for this plant, it should be previously washed down with a disinfectant.

Pandanus Veitchii:—This in common with other species of the Screw Pine requires a stove temperature, and therefore the night temperature attended during winter should be 60 degrees, and in summer 70 degrees, rising 10 degrees or more during the day from sun heat. Use a loamy, rather than a peaty compost, and provide each pot with efficient drainage, as Pandanus requires considerable quantities of water, and it is essential the water should filter quickly through the soil. Good color is encouraged by affording the plants some shade, in the absence of which the white portions of the leaves become pale green or faint yellow color. The plants should now be given less exciting treatment than they will need in spring, with the decreased temperature less water should be afforded, and the atmosphere may be kept less moist.

Tacsonia Failing to Blossom:—These plants flower on the stronger of the annual growths, and the better practice is to cut out some of the older parts of the vine, laying in an equal or greater number of strong young growth, tipping them to induce laterals to push. All other shoots of one year's growth should be spurred in to an inch in length. Do not let the plants form a tangle of shoots, but thin them a little, and let the finer ones hang free from each other. The border or tub in which the plant is grown should contain plenty of nutriment, and the present is a suitable season to attend to this matter. Let the drainage material be efficient, but not excessive in amount; make the soil fairly firm, and in the height of the season afford mild manure-water or manurial dressings occasionally, but do not afford this sort of assistance after July, or the growth will be extended to too late a date, and will not ripen sufficiently to flower satisfactorily. Do not afford shade to the plant at any time, and let it occupy a sunny situation. The plant never burns.

International Congress of Rose Growers:—The Journal of the National Horticultural Society of France, in its number for October, has a full report of the proceedings of the Congress on April 14 last. Amongst the interesting papers read on that occasion was one by Mr. Guillot on the classification of Roses for garden purposes. For this purpose, M. Guillot establishes seven groups among hybrid perpetuals, viz., 1 group, illustrated by Charles Lefebvre, bright red carmine; 2, General Jacqueminot, brilliant red; 3, Jules Margottin, cherry-red; 4, La Reine, lilac-rose; 5, Souvenir de la Reine d'Angleterre, brilliant rose; 6, Triomphe de l'Exposition, red crimson; 7, Victor Verdier, carmine-rose; 8, Geant des Batailles, fiery red; 9, Madame Laffay, deep rose; 10, Madame Recamier, flowers white, flushed with rose. Each of these groups is distinguished by characteristic features, which are given at length, and a list of varieties belonging to each is also given.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

Begonia Moonlight:—This beautiful begonia is by no means new. It is, however, a very scarce plant in cultivation, though now it has been proved amenable to the same treatment as secures success with the charming Begonia Gloire de Lorraine it is highly probable its cultivation will be extended. Begonia Moonlight was raised by the late Colonel Trevor Clarke, who was a great hybridist, by crossing B. Dreggei with B. Pearcei, the latter one of the forerunners of tuberous begonias.

KEAP STREET GREENHOUSES,

Brooklyn, New York, March 23, 1900.

Messrs. Thos W Weathered's Sons,
Nos. 46 and 48 Marion Street, New York City

Gentlemen:—I purchased from you last September one of your Sectional Hot Water Boilers for my Greenhouse at Flatbush, and was so well pleased with the results that I bought another one for my Keap Street Greenhouses, taking out another make.

Anything I might say would not be too high praise for your boilers.

It works perfectly, and I am pleased to say that so far I have saved in coal one half the cost of the boiler. They will therefore pay for themselves in another year, a result which I consider remarkable. I will be pleased to reply to anyone desiring the actual proof of above.

Yours very truly,
Signed, JOHN SCOTT.

P. S.—Kindly book my order for another boiler. I will let you know later when to deliver it.

FLOWERS OF OUR STATES.

The discussion anent our national flower is still an open one, some contending for the violet, some for the golden rod. Many states, however, have adopted special flowers for their own, as follows:

California, California poppy; Colorado, columbine; Delaware, peach blossom; Idaho, syringa; Indiana, corn; Iowa, wild rose; Maine, pine cone and tassel; Michigan, apple blossom; Minnesota, cypripedium or moccasin flower; Montana, bitterroot; Nebraska, golden rod; Nevada, sunflower; New York, rose; North Dakota, golden rod; Oklahoma, mistletoe; Oregon, golden rod; Rhode Island, violet; Utah, sego lily; Vermont, red clover; Washington, rhododendron; Alabama, golden rod; West Virginia, inclines to the rhododendron.

In other states the sentiment appears to be favorable to flowers as follows: Illinois, rose, violet and golden rod, in the order named; Massachusetts, columbine; Ohio, golden rod; Tennessee, golden rod. Michigan adopted the apple blossom by vote of the legislature. New York, in addition to choosing the rose as the state flower, has selected the maple as the state tree.

No final steps have yet been taken for the adoption of a national flower. An effort was made in 1896 by the National Floral Congress, called together by the Governor of North Carolina, to agree upon a flower, but as many states were unrepresented nothing came of it, and it is now suggested that another national convention shall be called. Inasmuch as many nations have floral emblems the United States should have one, but even if a national convention could agree upon one, it is doubtful whether Congress would find time to consider a memorial which would carry with it neither political advantage nor an appropriation.

You would find a copy of the Florists' Manual, by Wm. Scott, especially valuable during the next few months. It tells you all about handling bedding plants to the best advantage at the least expense. The book will save you many times its cost during that period.

EXPLAINED BY THE

W. D. Snell, Newville, Herkimer Co., N. Y., Jan. 2d, 1901, says:

"I wish to express my thorough satisfaction with the No. 70 Standard Sectional steam boiler which I placed in my greenhouses early in December last year. I have three houses, 20x65, located side by side, with glass in roofs and gables. The houses are built of glass and wood, and contain in all about 5,000 square feet of glass surface. I have in use about 2,000 feet one-inch pipe or about 700 square feet of radiation. I carry a temperature of about 50 degrees at night, but have had no difficulty in getting any higher temperature desired. I find that the boiler will run ten hours without attention. I attend to it about nine o'clock at night and it will run with no further attention until seven o'clock in the morning. The draft I have is not a good one, yet notwithstanding this objection, I have no difficulty in getting the fire up and getting as much steam as I desire.

"I can thoroughly reccommend the boiler and will be glad to have you refer to me anyone that wants further information".

Trade Conditions.

Trade has kept up very nicely during the season of Lent, although funeral work was the cause of this to a large extent. The demand from the mourners, at times, caused quite a shortage in stock of all kinds.

Prospects are bright for a bountiful stock for Easter. Even though all the Harrisiis and Longiflorums will not be in, the supply will be larger than last year and of better quality.

Prices have changed very little during the past two or three weeks, carnations dropping only a trifle. There is a great shortage of good ferns and hardly any smilax. J. B.

One of the New York papers in reporting the rose show last week devoted over half of its report to a description of the costumes worn by the fashionable women in attendance. Evidently the costumes were more interesting than the roses to this reporter.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The Park Board has appointed a committee to design a floral float for the parade during the feast of flowers in May.

Liberty, Mo.—Paul Stark reports that trade is improving and that calls for funeral flowers have exceeded those of any former years. He will have more glass this year to supply home demand.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

At the monthly meeting of the Elmira Horticultural Society held March 12 there was a fine display of carnations contributed by the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill.; Dana R. Herron, Olean, N. Y.; John B. Rudy and E. M. & H. N. Hoffman, this city.

The newly elected president, Prof. J. W. Roberts, delivered a very interesting address. He announced that various valuable special prizes had been contributed to be competed for at the exhibitions of the society and outlined plans for increasing the society's usefulness.

The program included a paper on perennials by Flora Swift, one on sweet peas by Eugene Lewis, and one on the vegetable garden by J. E. Anthony.

Mr. Rudy exhibited a number of fine new geraniums.

The Snow Question Again.

I recently published views of wooden gutter and Garland iron gutter houses at the establishment of Wietor Bros., Chicago, taken soon after the big snow storm.

Here are two from photographs taken a little later at the establishment of Peter Reinberg, Chicago.

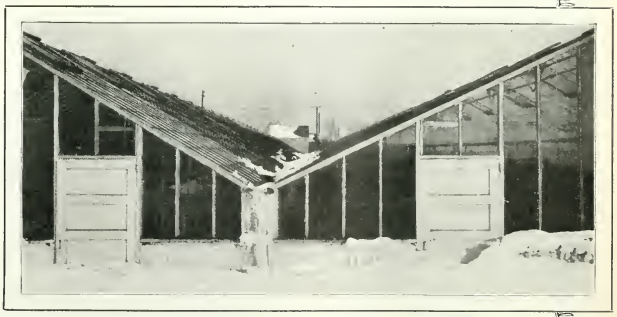
This view shows what was left of the snow in the valley between the Garland Iron Gutter houses at the same time, the two photographs being taken within a few minutes of each other.



What makes this difference? It is simply because iron is a better conductor of heat than wood. The iron gutters absorb the heat from the inside of the house and this starts the melting of the snow at the gutter instead of at the ridge, and starts it at once. Wood does'nt absorb enough to have any appreciable effect.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Easter.

Easter comes but once a year; make the best of it. No use to get worried; smiles pay better than scowls. A good, conscientious plantsman to care for your stock is a very valuable personage; get one from your grower if you have none. Whatever you do hide nervous excitement. Stop and think and look over the situation once in a while. A little planning may avoid much trouble. If there is no time to get out to eat see that food is brought in, and on time, too; a hungry stomach usually produces an unpleasant face and the few moments required to obviate all this is time well spent.

A florist's store at Easter should be like a battleship going into action, the deck cleared of all useless stuff. Be sure to have the right people in the right place; have pads and plenty of pencils always handy. Avoid creating an impression on anyone that they are being overcharged, for such is often fatal to business. Remember you are in the business 365 days a year, and that your customers' continuous trade is necessary to keep you up. Therefore, don't try to squeeze all your year into one week. The easy-going customer, or in vulgar parlance, the "sucker," whom many gloat in "soaking," may wake up some day and prove how easy it is to lose a good patron and how foolish it is to imitate the hog.

A good shipping clerk in busy times is worth his weight in substantial appreciation. Boys will be boys and are not men; remember that when loading them up with packages for delivery. Don't be satisfied and feel entirely relieved of responsibility when you see a plant, basket, or box leave your store; make provisions for and assure yourself that it reaches its destination in good condition. A plant delivered in a broken or otherwise dilapidated state is a mute but forcible example of your incompetency or carelessness. Temporary help, who know not plants, are seldom blamable—it is the employer.

Better to have plants delivered on Saturday night than on Easter Sunday afternoon or night. Easter presents delivered after noon on Sunday have lost considerable value from a sentimental point of view. "Far away" deliveries deserve the same consideration as those near by, and the same principle applies to small and large purchases. The dollar customer to-day may be a ten dollar customer to-morrow. Many florists forget this.

A few moments devoted to the tying up of plants, especially azaleas, lilies, etc., when ready for delivery may make it unnecessary for you to replace them or try to appease and explain to two angry people, the purchaser and the recipient. Unless pinched for room, and even then, don't crowd all your stock together. Great masses of color may be very effective to the general eye, but the purchasing eye—the eye you are anxious for—cares not for the massive group; it seeks individual beauty and worth, therefore, have your specialties elevated singled out; make them prominently attractive. Many a good plant remains unpurchased because its beauty is hidden.

First come, first served, may be a good practice in some cases, but not in all. Good customers who are unavoidably late in coming to buy appreciate a reservation of stock you may think will suit them, and invariably the selection if good is satisfactory. It is bad policy to create the impression on any mind that the best stock is sold; there are too many florists these days to justify any one momentary gulp of satisfaction in pointing to the best stock going to Mrs. Soand-So. If you sell a handsome basket try to duplicate it at once. If you cannot and some of your customers are unreasonably jealous (and many such there are) put the basket or plant out of their range of vision.

Making Stock Attractive.

It is too late now to doubt the wisdom of your purchases. Do the best you can to dispose of your stock at a fair profit. Quality, of course, is at all times most desirable, but inferior goods may often be made to exceed in beauty. In other words, quality of art can always outshine quality of material. A good plant or flower may sell itself; the poor ones need assistance. Almost anything in fair condition has a chance to be sold this Easter; it depends on the manner of presentation. Styles there are to be sure a plenty, you can manufacture some yourself. Made-up baskets of plants will be the leading and most profitable offering in the principal New York stores, and for these mostly anything is suitable. We'll give our own and other people's creations in very brief description, for time is valuable to all just now.

In the first place, people accustomed to growing plants generally prefer to see them in plain, clean pots. The expressed desire to have plants delivered so is yearly increasing among the most sensible; of course the growers don't bother cleaning the pots; you should, though, and often a soft, water-soaked common red brick rubbed on the pots will give them a good brightened up color. Ordinary plant pots and saucers covered with enamel paint in good colors, such as foliage green, white, genista yellow or cherry red have been and will continue to be very popular; they are cheap and add much to the effectiveness of any plant, providing of course the color is appropriate to the flower. White and yellow seldom fight, but the reds and pinks are often troublesome.

The general run of large plants will be put in basket pot covers, and foliage green or white is the best. Often plants such as Crimson Ramblers, etc., which carry all their flowers on top, are made more festive, we mean attractive, by a short bow or two of broad ribbon half way down the plant, but again look out for war in colors. Plenty of ribbons are being used this Easter, but they are being used more sensibly. They no longer choke or cover the flowers, but are attached to the stem or foliage only to cover defects, or add emphasis to the beauty or color of the flower.

The ribbons are broader this year, are of one self color, and the tones are softer and more beautiful than ever. Taffetas and satin finished Libertics are the greatest favorites. We have found one brand of ribbon in New York that we think the best of all for florists' fine work. Speaking of ribbons and baskets, they come mighty high; one needs be careful in selection and extent; a large stock of such material is essential in some stores, but many can dispense with them.

The tendency this year is for the larger and better plants. The average lily in a pot is too small; many of them have been put three, six, nine and even twelve in a pot or tub and they sell quickly. The tubs can be painted green, white or yellow, the bands a different color, and often a broad sash of light blue ribbon is preferable to white, tied half way up the stems.

The best and newest things we have seen this season are the gaudy colored Porto Rican Carnival hats. So far they have not been used by the florist, but could be made a great feature when filled lightly with flowers and tied with band and hanging bow of bright colored soft ribbon. The hats would be prized as favors even more than a basket, because they are fantastic and novel. They are very large, of many colors, and the edges are rough and unfinished, giving them a very odd appearance. These hats are destined to form a principal feature at many affairs during the summer.

The Porto Rican matting we made mention of in previous notes is used instead of crepe paper in the leading stores. It is more expensive, of course, but is richer and more artistic. Very fine effects can be obtained by ruffling or unweaving the edges from four to six inches. It does not become soggy from a little water and does not crumple up in a woebegone manner like paper does. We are using it with contrasting ribbons of which the following are a few:

Color Combinations.

The matting is arranged to hide bareness of stem as well as to cover pot. Suppose you trim a lilac, white or green mat; tie round with broad bow of white or lavender ribbon; if white lilac, blue or light pink ribbon is best. With deep pink azaleas use white mat and white ribbon; the same on light pink unless you can match the flower with ribbon, then use green mat. With white azalea use white mat with pink or blue ribbon. A soft yellow will go well with bougainvillea, dark green around the violet, primroses, genistas, acacias and cricas, with same colored ribbon or one to match flower. Scotch plaid effects can be got for the ericas, but there's a little jealousy left among the clans and these ericas are not Scotch anyhow. That flat of roses or bulbs would look better if the box were painted green. No time to do it now, so we put green mat around—just enough to hide box and soil, and tie with bright harmonizing color ribbon. Where the flowers are light it is safer to use a darker ribbon; where the flowers are dark, a lighter ribbon.

The half open hamper basket is a winner this time; with zinc lining it is fine, but needn't bother if you have none; line inside of basket with stout paper, fill in with gray moss, pick out assortment of small green and flowering plants that will just peep over the lid and sides when planted in sideways. We tie a broad ribbon around the body of the hamper and arrange a couple of small Farleyense to hang half way over this ribbon. The effect is fine with yellow, white, pink or any soft color. Be careful of the flowering plant you put near the ribbon; it may be azalea, erica, small rose or bulb, but must be choice. We arranged some hampers last Christmas and they were considered by experts the best things in the city; there is a general adoption of them this Easter and they bring big prices. Use all the variety you can and fill in with small ferns; need not take anything out of pots unless basket is very small; keep roots and moss damp.

You florists out west have concentrated too much attention on cut flowers. Plants deserve attention. Here we have a large variety of good, well grown stock to select from and the results are what you too should know. Low baskets of primroses, pansies, violets, forgetmenots, bulbs, etc., sell well. Needn't bother about fancy baskets; we prefer the butcher and grocery baskets seen at the markets, only they should be painted green; this can be done if attended to in time.

Don't crowd your best stock in the window; put a few made-up plants or baskets in it, and have the good things right under the people's noses.

A CHRYSANTHEMUM STORY.

We present herewith a series of five engravings from photographs kindly sent us by Mr. John B. Rudy, gardener to Hon. J. S. Fassett, Elmira, N. Y., showing the progress of a bench of chrysanthemums during the past season. It is certainly an interesting record, especially in view of the fact that from this bench Mr. Rudy cut splendid blooms with 6-foot stems with which at the last fall show in his city he captured seven first premiums out of seven entries against keen competition.

Referring to the pictures, Mr. Rudy writes: "The plants were benched June 10, somewhat later than in former seasons. They were planted about ten inches apart each way, in well rotted sod. The house is an iron frame one, running east and west, and there are roses and other stock in the same house. We never shade the chrysanthemums, and aim to give them the benefit of all the sun at all times in the growing as well as the flowering season."

them started to grow when planted out. I plant them in three different places in the garden to make sure I get them in one place if not another.

I plant in a row running east and west on the north side of a row of cannas or some tall growing plants. I find this gives them enough shade in the hottest part of the day. I have planted a bed for the last few years alongside of a row of locust trees running north and south, on the west side, but each time they have become diseased. The soil is very sandy, so I find it necessary to give them a heavy mulching. I find that half rotted leaves are good for this purpose, as they retain the moisture in the soil for a long time and violets like the earth cool and moist; this I find a most important thing to get good strong plants.

I believe in keeping the runners pulled off, and if the plants spread too much and make too many crowns to pinch them off, as I get better results from plants with one or two crowns than with four or five. I may not get as many blooms but I get larger and stiffer stems. If there should come a long dry spell of weather I give them a good watering, enough to saturate the earth around them. I have grown them in the house and frames all summer, but this I do not approve of. I find that in growing them out in the summer I can make the beds rich enough inside to run the plants over winter without applying any manure, which I find is the best, as I believe a great deal of harm is done by using artificial manures in the winter.

VIOLETS.

By Joseph Bradley.

[Read before the Tarrytown Horticultural Society, March 28.]

The way I grow violets: I take cuttings in February or first week in March from plants grown in a cold frame, with just enough protection from the cold to keep them alive; in so doing I get stronger plants. I start the cuttings in half sand and half leaf mold and find they root quicker and make more roots than when grown in all sand. They are left in the violet house until planted out; by that time they have good, long roots, and there is no trouble to get

I use the soil I take out of the rose house. I make it about six inches deep, spread a good coat of rotted cow manure on top, then spread over this a good coat of air-slaked lime and mix the whole well together. When I have not enough of this I take two-thirds good garden soil to one-third of leaf mold, with the same treatment of manure and lime as above. I have used new soil the same as for roses, but I cannot get as good results from it.

I plant inside in September and like them to get a good hold of the fresh soil before the growing season closes, but am careful to keep the house open as long as possible and allow them to have the first few light frosts, as it stiffens them and makes them hardy. I do not turn on the heat until I am forced to. I try to keep it about 42 degrees, with the ventilators a little open. I would rather have it at the freezing point than 50 degrees. I keep them well watered and syringe them on bright mornings, but never in the evening.

I find it very beneficial to keep the surface of the soil stirred between the plants; this I do with an old chisel. I give them two or three sprinklings of air-slaked lime and work it in with the chisel and hands; this keeps the earth sweet and there is nothing so detrimental to violets as the earth becoming sour.

There are two varieties of insects which damage the plants if not kept in check. One is a small green worm or caterpillar, which lodges on the under side of the leaves and eats them full of holes. I use slugshot for these put on with a small blower. Then there is the larva of a gallfly. This gets on the young leaves as they come up from the crown and causes them to curl and rot off. I use Ivory soap for these; one small cake dissolved in five gallons of water and put on either with the syringe or watering pot. This also keeps down red spider.

The eel worm is very destructive, and I used to be troubled with it until I used plenty of lime. I believe violets like the lime, and there seems to be no fear of using too much. There are two or three forms of disease. One is commonly called the "Spot," which causes the most trouble. This, in my opinion, comes from too much dampness on the foliage, coupled with a warm, muggy atmosphere. I have had the spot for the last three years, and each time have succeeded in getting clear of it by simply placing the plants in the frame and greenhouse and placing the sash over them to keep the drip off them and keep a lively circulation of air through them. For those in the frame I drive a row of stakes at each end of the sash, leaving them fifteen inches above the frame, then nail a strip on top of them and then lay on the sash. For those in the house I can lift up the sash from the bottom, which I do, thus getting a good circulation of air, and here I would say, never leave them closed one hour that you can have them open. When a few dull days come in winter and the frames have been kept closed I have seen specks of disease come on them.

There is another form of disease which causes a brown rim around the leaf. This I think comes from the roots and may be caused by the soil becoming stagnant and sour, or it may be caused by artificial manure or by the eel worm, and I find when once it comes it is very hard to get rid of. I give them a good coating of air-slaked lime, and work it in as deeply as possible without cutting the roots; this helps them somewhat, if not too bad.

Then there is what is commonly called the heart rot. This again is caused by too close an atmosphere, and this is one of the reasons I prefer a medium-sized plant to a large one; the foliage is not dense and it allows the crowns more air and keeps them dry. I have been more troubled with this last-named disease, if it may be called a disease, than with both the others, and I believe this is on account of so much warm, muggy weather so late in the fall.

If you wish to keep them blooming as long as possible in the spring I find it necessary to shade the glass with lime the last week in February or the first week in March; it keeps them from sending up their young foliage and for those in the frames about the last week in March I lay the shutters on and tilt the sash from one side. By so doing I can keep good blooms on them from two to three weeks longer.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Geraniums.

After the eventful days of this week there is still a great deal of important work to do, particularly with those who have been growing a lot of Easter stuff to be succeeded with bedding plants.

Our most important item is to get all the zonal geraniums shifted from a 3-inch to a 4-inch pot. We have to give them this size for our patrons want a good plant in flower. Don't ever put zonals into a rich, light soil or they will grow leafy and soft with a poor flower. Use heavy loam with a fifth or sixth of old rotten manure and see that they are potted firmly. I have many times urged this point but it is an important one. Firmness of the soil produces a stout, hard growth with a tendency to flower and that is what you want. You feel tempted to shade every house in the bright suns of April and May but we manage to get along till the end of May without any shading over the geraniums.

I have also often commented on the great benefit of plunging material between the pots. I cannot wholly account for the great benefit it is to all plants in pots on a bench in hot bright weather, for it is not any manurial quality that the plants receive. It is doubtless the uniform moisture that the roots enjoy, or rather the ill effects of the severe drying out which they escape, and that teaches us quite a little. Of all the material for this purpose nothing equals for cleanliness, easy handling or good results, the refuse hops. Even if your plunging reaches but half way up the pot it is of the greatest benefit. Now, this plunging of plants costs some labor but really scarcely a fraction of a cent on each plant, and it is well repaid in the size and vigor of the plant. This plan does not apply to geraniums alone but to all plants that should receive the full sun till bedding out time.

Hot-beds.

We still believe in the old-fashioned hot-beds and five or six weeks in a mild one will finish off many plants that no greenhouse can do. You do not want a great deep affair, such as the growers of lettuce and cucumbers make in March; eighteen inches of stable manure is enough with five or six inches of soil or sand for plunging material is all you want. Now, there are some plants that are not at all benefited by a hot-bed, or rather would make a rank growth which would unfit them for bedding. Among them the flowering geraniums, salvias, petunias, centaurea, nasturtiums, in fact anything that grows freely inside. But there are several of our bedding plants that don't grow freely inside and the hot-bed makes them jump. The alternantheras, lemon verbenas, variegated and scented geraniums, verbenas, small pots of mignonette, and a little later coleus and achyranthes and acalypha will do finely. There is a decided advantage in having the bedding coleus in a hot-bed, because by the middle of May you can lift off the sash on warm days and harden them off, which is an immense advantage when putting plants into the open ground.

Seedlings.

Soon after Easter your seedlings will be ready and by the middle of April the asters, phlox, dianthus and other so-called hardy annuals will do very well in a cold-frame.

Begonias.

We usually start tuberous rooted begonias for bedding about now. You do not want large plants of these for the flower gardens; they don't do so well when put out. The best beds of begonias I ever saw were started in a mild hot-bed as late as May the first. They had made little growth when put out on June the first, but grew finely and made the most brilliant bed, not eclipsed even by a geranium. We start them in flats of sandy soil on a warm bench and about May the first pot them into 4-inch pots, and then into a hot-bed in the full sun and ventilate on all possible occasions. To take a tuberous-rooted begonia out of a shaded house and expect it to do well out of doors in the broad sun and wind is not reasonable, but if grown right they do make a fine bed.

Poinsettias.

I believe these were very popular last winter and are now known by many of us as the Christmas flower. Supposing you have, or buy, any old canes, it is time now to start them growing. Don't cut them up into pieces three or four inches long as we used to. It is a slow method and they don't make as good plants. Just shake off all the soil and re-pot, at the same time cutting back the cane to sound wood. In a good warm house the eyes soon break and when the cuttings are a few inches long take them off just below a joint, but leave one eye of the new growth on the old cane because from that you will get another cutting. You can keep on propagating till next September. Cuttings root easily and surely in sand during the whole summer, but you must keep them soaked and shaded.

The earliest rooted cuttings sometimes make tall plants. Last year, with us, for some reason or other they grew up taller than was desirable. Those propagated in July and August often make the most useful and those propagated in September make the right plants for pans, in which shape now we find most of our customers prefer them. You must, however, get the old canes up and started or they will be starting themselves beneath the bench.

William Scott.

MILDEW ON ROSES.

What can we do to prevent mildew on roses? We have grown Jacqueminots for the last twenty years. With the first crop we have no mildew, but the tender growth of the second crop is generally badly affected. Maryland.

Mildew on roses under glass is easily kept in check, but it is very difficult, in fact, almost impossible, to keep outdoor grown roses clean in some localities. It is brought on by exposure to cold draughts when the plants are growing rapidly, by too much moisture over night, by sudden and extreme changes of temperature and by various other causes. I know of no way to prevent it other than to avoid these conditions as much as possible. The best remedy is sulphur, and if used in time will do much to keep it from spreading. M. Stauch.

SMILAX—ASPARAGUS—CARNATIONS.

What is the proper temperature for smilax, also for Asparagus plumosus and A. Sprengeri?

Which are considered best for carnations—solid beds or benches?

J. G. W.

The pages of the Review have many times contained my opinion of how to grow smilax. It can be grown in a night temperature of 55 degrees, but under these conditions it would not be profitable; 65 degrees at night is the right temperature to grow it profitably. Contrary to what might be expected, smilax grown in a high temperature is not by any means more liable to wilt than that grown in a cool temperature. With good management you should be able to get four crops in a year. To do that you must plant early in July and they should be strong young plants in 3-inch pots. A good heavy soil suits smilax as it does all the family.

Asparagus plumosus will grow very well in 60 degrees and so will Asparagus Sprengeri. Plumosus is always planted out. It does much better in a solid bed; and have no boards or planks between the earth and the bed. Let it be on the solid ground. Asparagus Sprengeri will do on a raised bench. In fact it is a better place than on a solid bed and can be very well grown in 7 or 8-inch pots or hanging baskets. Sprengeri is a great feeder and soon exhausts the soil you start with.

The question about carnations is rather a heavy one and quite a chapter could be written on it. Some growers are very successful with the solid benches. My own opinion from experience is that I would rather have them on raised benches in five inches of soil. When we see the good results that are obtained by the leading growers on benches why should we want anything better?

The Cape Jessamine.

The advantage in getting them in a solid bed would be that you could have the walls of brick and there would be no replenishing as is the case every three or four years with benches. And perhaps another advantage of the solid beds would be that when the hot suns of April and May come they would not need so much watering and as the roots would go deeper they would likely give larger and better flowers. Still for all that from October to April, and that is the time when we get big prices for flowers, they are easier managed and better results can be obtained on the raised benches, and that, I believe, is the best way to grow them.

William Scott.

THE JESSAMINES.

Among the southern grown flowers which are most widely known for their fragrance, beauty and shipping qualities are the Jessamines (Gardenia florida).

Of the Cape variety there are two kinds, known as the Capes and Grandifloras. They are very much alike, being pure white with rich, waxy green leaves. The Capes blossom almost all summer, but are much smaller both in buds and foliage than the Grandifloras, and seldom have the long straight stems of the latter. The season for the Grandiflora Jessamine is about the middle of May, and usually lasts three weeks.

Near Alvin, a little place in southern Texas, the Grandifloras were first found, and now they are cultivated in open fields. The shrubs reach a height of from six to eight feet, are evergreen, and during the blossoming season are covered with the pure white blossoms which perfume the air for miles around.

The buds have been shipped as far north as Canada and to every state in the Union. Pense Cook.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market has been active since the last report. Business for this week opened with a rush on Monday, a very large number of floral offerings being sent to the members of new councils, in their chambers at city hall. The gifts were nearly all made up baskets of various kinds, creating an unusual demand for roses of the poorer grades. So numerous were the orders for this occasion that twelve florists' wagons were counted in front of the public buildings at one time, and the popular members were obliged to hire express wagons to carry their flowers home.

Prices rule about the same as last week, excepting that the second class roses advanced as noted above. The indications are that roses will advance little if any at Easter. Choice Beauties are expected to bring from $3 to $6 a dozen; Brides and Maids from $8 to $10 a hundred. Carnations will be in good supply, better it is thought than usual at Easter. Ordinary grades are quoted at from $3 to $4 a hundred, fancies at from $5 to $8 a hundred. Sweet peas, which are becoming more plentiful, will bring from $1.50 to $2 a hundred and can now be had in several colors. All greens are in brisk demand, especially asparagus.

Lilies are selling well and will probably be cleaned up, many being late and others poor; the ruling price is 12 cents per bud and flower whether cut or on the plant. Some fears have been felt as to whether azaleas will be in short supply. This seems unlikely, as at the close of last week, Aschmann, Bunting, Dreer and Meeky, all had large stocks on hand. The retailers can generally manage to make other plants go around if the lilies and azaleas hold out.

Various Items.

Most of the large retailers have secured a convenient annex, so to speak, wherein they can store plants sold till the time for delivery arrives or where they can display part of their stock. Some of the growers have taken stores and stands in the heart of the city just for a week. Charles Fox, Broad and Thompson Sts., received his lilies the end of last week, the plants all being in bud with no open flowers. This plan makes the transfer from the greenhouse to the store much less risky than when the flowers are open. Judgment must be used in selecting plants with buds that are far enough advanced to open in time without the aid of sunlight.

W. L. Edwards, of Norwood, Delaware Co., lost many of his carnations by stem rot last fall and was obliged to find a suitable substitute. He planted two houses in pansies, separate colors; the cut flowers have proved a paying crop.

There has been some inquiry for well grown geraniums in 6-inch pots. These should pay at from $3 to $4 a dozen. Here is an opening for some one next season.

Thomas Meehan & Sons have two houses of sweet peas that are beginning to bear well. They have Blanche Ferry, Emily Henderson and New Countess.

Hugh Graham as well as George Anderson will have Brunners at Easter.

Jacob Becker has some well grown Souvenir de Wootton in pots.

Friday night saw the close of a pretty Easter opening, held on three evenings last week by Samuel S. Pennock. Five growers were represented: Hugh Graham, of Logan; Hugh Walch, of Tioga; William K. Harris and Robert Craig & Son, of West Philadelphia; and Robert Scott & Son, of Sharon Hill. Each grower exhibited sample lilies, azaleas, hydrangeas, genistas, spireas and other plants in bloom on tables from which orders were taken. There were also exhibits of choice Beauties, Lawsons and other cut flowers to show that Mr. Pennock's consignors will keep up the high standard of quality at the coming great plant festival. The whole place, including the cold storage rooms, showed to advantage, being brightly lighted and full of people. The affair was successful from a business standpoint.

Charles Zimmer has been making a reputation as a grower of Princess of Wales violets this season. Color, stem and foliage are praised by critical buyers.

A Philadelphian who was at the "Hyphen" rose show says that all the growers took off their hats to Stephen Mortenson when they saw his vase of Liberty. It was not for competition, but so fine a display that great things were prophesied for this Southampton man in the near future.

Robert A. Stewart has his new store in running order for this month, which he considers the best of the twelve.

The rose growers are trying raffia for all tying, both stakes and plants. It is cheaper than string, but whether it is as quick and effective is a question.

A contemporary announces that William Munro has succeeded W. A. Leonard as foreman at R. Scott & Son's, the retiring foreman having rented a place on his own account.

The club meeting has been postponed until Tuesday in Easter week. John N. May will speak on the rose meet at the "Hyphen." Phil.

BUFFALO.

We have been blessed with a few fine, bright days, which have been especially welcome to those lily buds which were backward. Although having very sharp frosts every night we are gradually tapering off, with every sign that a few days more will bring the weather we so much desire for Easter. The Main street stores are making a very gay appearance. Palmer is always up to date. Last week his window was especially attractive. He had the new famous Beck design, which as every one knows is North and South America, and on it a huge buffalo. The ground work was galax leaves and the two continents were faithfully worked out in white and pink carnations and it was all surmounted by a well designed buffalo standing on a globe. Although this is not so much art as it is fine mechanical work it attracted throngs of the passers-by.

As I said in my last letter, there is every probability of a lively Easter for the florists, and from the present outlook I scarcely think there will be enough good stuff to go round. Mr. Henry Wise, "the wise man of the East—Aurora," gave us a call this week. Mr. Wise has been very successful this winter with the Imperial violet. I have not heard much about this, strange to say, and yet it is much larger, quite as fragrant, and has finer foliage than the Marie Louise. If it does as well generally as it has with Mr. Wise it will certainly soon displace the old favorite.

Mr. Harlan P. Kelsey was also here. Every one ought to know this bright nurseryman, who was the author of the galax. We are too busy this week to write much gossip but there is one important subject that I want my readers to take particular notice of.

Buffalo Hotels.

We have heard from reliable sources that there is a rumor going round the country that the hotels and restaurants of our city are going to charge exorbitant prices during the Pan-American season. The best hotels will possibly put up their prices a little above their usual figures, but it will be a very small percentage of the great army of visitors to the Exposition who will depend on going to these hotels. Buffalo, for the last five or six years has built a great many very fine apartment houses; in fact in that line the city has been overdone. All these are now converted into hotels. There are, besides that, a great many temporary structures being put up specially for the accommodation of visitors, several of them of immense size.

But with all this these are not to be the chief source of accommodation for visitors. It would be within bounds to say that there are thousands of homes in Buffalo, good substantial residences, and their owners are anxious and willing to make a little money this summer by renting out rooms to visitors. This source alone will accommodate, I believe, fifty thousand people. The rates of these private houses are already known to be from one to two dollars for a person. This includes a breakfast and other meals it required, but usually in exposition cities a breakfast is all that is expected as there are plenty of restaurants and other places to obtain meals besides going home to the boarding house. Whatever apprehensions there were a few months ago of Buffalo not accommodating its many thousands of visitors are, I believe, entirely dispelled, for from all sides we are having applications from people who are anxious to rent their rooms, and I wish particularly to say that these are not a poor class of houses but good, substantial buildings, and what is better than that, all in the beautiful residence portion of our city.

There are already several agencies that can be applied to and rooms engaged months ahead. But Mr. W. A. Adams, of 479 Main street, is chairman of the florists' hotel committee, and he has promised, and I know will send a communication to all the trade journals announcing the fact that he is ready to receive applications from all or anyone who wishes to engage rooms. Large Gladiolus Bulbs.

GLADIOLUS BULBS.

The engravings are from photographs of gladiolus bulbs and bulblets grown at Meadowvale Farm. The largest bulb shown in the cut with the rule, is, I believe, the largest yet brought to the attention of the public, measuring after two months' curing a trifle over four inches in diameter. It is of the Lemoine strain, and one might suppose from its size that it received extra cultivation, which I assure you is not so, for it was grown in a large field, six acres, with other varieties, and was not noticed until digging time, when the foreman's attention was called to its unusual size.

While having this bulb photographed I had some others taken to more especially show the healthy condition of stock grown in our soil. The varieties photographed comprise Groff hybrids, Lemoinei and Gandavensis. The bottom row contains corms of Lemoinei. The next row, bulblets, one year from corms, and the other rows, bulbs one year from small bulblets. We have an irrigating plant here, capable of taking care of all our fields, and we never allow our stock to show the want of water, for during droughts we have men who spray the fields at night with a 2-inch hose. The following day, after the top moisture is dried out, cultivators are put through every row of gladioli, so as to retain the moisture underneath.

While on the subject of large bulbs, let me say that while a large gladiolus bulb is admittedly the best for blooming purposes, it does not follow that in selecting from a mixture one should take all large bulbs, for it has been clearly demonstrated that there are very many fine varieties grown which, although given extra care and cultivation, respond to such treatment not in the increased size of bulb, but rather in producing two or more blooming bulbs, or many cormels, frequently both. Such varieties as these are of course eliminated by selecting only the largest, and it is no wonder that the average retail buyer complains of quality when he insists upon having nothing but large bulbs, and does not leave the selection to one who knows the character and habit of most, if not every variety, he offers. What is most desirable is a clean, healthy, well shaped fat bulb. These facts are being realized more every year, and are acknowledged by those seeking quality rather than quantity and low price.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Easter stock has been helped along by several fine, clear days, although the weather has been cold and windy the past week. Shipping trade was brisk all of last week; prices have held up quite well and stock has been somewhat scarce. No doubt many of the growers are holding back their stock so as to obtain better prices. First-class stock has not been over-plentiful during the week and the wholesale market shows a few changes over the past week. Carnations are not coming in quite so plentiful as they were. Roses of good quality keep at regular prices except in large lots. Meteors are seen in fine condition with rather short stems; Brides and Maids are short in supply just now; the demand for Beauties has been fine with not enough to go around. Easter prices will no doubt bring them up to $6 and $8 per dozen; other roses will run from $4 to $10 per 100.

In carnations there are very fine flowers; Daybreak and all whites lead in demand. None are sold under $2, from that up to $3, extra fancies bring $4.

Bulb stuff is not so much overstocked as it was; Dutch hyacinths are scarce, though no doubt lots of them will be seen in pots this year for Easter plants. Romans are selling well at $2, so is valley at $4; daffodils are rather stagnant and trumpet major is a drug; callas do not sell well; Harrisii and longiflorum are steady. It is the opinion of the wholesalers that while Easter sales will be large the prices will not advance much. Smilax seems scarce just now and asparagus sells well at 50 cents per string.

Various Notes.

The floral euchre was a grand success

last Thursday night and the large crowd that was present seemed to enjoy itself very much. All the prizes were plants and cut flowers. Much credit is due Fred C. Weber, John Young, F. M. Ellis, F. H. Weber and Will Adels for the way in which they handled the affair. The arrangement committee are thankful to all the local florists who donated plants; Walter W. Coles, of Kokomo, Ind., is especially thanked for the fine lot of American Beauties and Kaiserins he sent; they were among the best prizes. After the playing and distribution of prizes the young folks danced until early in the morning.

Our visitor last week was the genial Walter Mott, who represents Henry Dreer, of Philadelphia. Walter has a great many friends in St. Louis who are always glad to see him.

I noticed in the last issue of the REVIEW the article headed "Bowling" from Bro. Scott, P. N. F. B. L. I think the plan a good one and heartily indorse it, and hope the other "cranks at large" will do the same. St. Louis has the three men that can beat any three florists that will be at the convention in Buffalo this summer. J. J. B.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The weather averages very unfavorable and indications of a shortage for the Easter trade are becoming stronger. All the wholesalers report large advance orders and the shortage may extend to every line, except possibly daffodils and violets. Carnations are already very scarce, especially white. A feature noticed in many advance orders is an increase in the call for white over previous years. In roses Brides are in largest demand, though Maids usually lead at the season. Good Beauties are much short of the demand. Prices of good roses and carnations are stiffening some over the quotations previously published. Good bulbous flowers will evidently be none too plentiful, though there may be an oversupply of that which has been held too long. Already overripe tulips are making their appearance. As none of these can be shipped the fakers will be about the only outlet.

When the lilies are all in there will be a big lot of them, but there will hardly be enough first-class ones to go around and no one seems to be ready to take the poor ones.

The supply is certainly not what it ought to be, but we imagine there will be a lot of stock marketed and that the average results will be better than seems possible at this writing. Let us hope so.

On Wednesday we were favored with some really bright weather, and if this continues the supply may be materially enlarged, though it comes rather late to have as much effect as is to be desired.

Various Items.

A regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held at 40 Randolph street tomorrow (Friday) evening. The program includes a paper by Mr. D. F. Hawkes on "Hardy Herbaceous Plants."

Mr. Frank Garland, the well known grower of Des Plaines, has opened a city wholesale place at 55 and 57 Wabash Ave., in the store formerly occupied by A. H. Poehlmann. C. S. Stewart is in charge.

Mr. C. L. Washburn has returned from South Carolina. He reports that the peach trees and the trailing arbutus were in bloom when he left and that the native rhododendrons were in bud. Mrs. Washburn will remain there some time longer, her health improving rapidly in such a favorable climate.

Mr. O. P. Bassett is now [illegible] vacation at West Baden, Ind.

McKellar & Winterson are doing a fine business in Easter plants as well as cut flowers and supplies. They are fortunate in having a larger supply of lilies than usual.

Callas from California are again in the market. It was merely an experimental shipment. These came through in better shape than the big shipment made some years ago. If they can be sent through in quantity as well and the freight don't eat them up California callas may yet be a factor in the market at Easter.

Mr. E. Winterson entertained a party of about twenty florist friends at his home last Sunday evening and it seems needless to add that Walter Kreitling was the star of the evening.

Mr. F. J. King, Ottawa, Ill., was a recent visitor.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The Tarrytown Horticultural Society held its regular monthly meeting March 28 with President Smith in the chair and about thirty members present. The executive committee reported the list of essays for the year complete, and that the annual flower show of the society will be held Nov. 5, 6 and 7. Mr. L. A. Martin resigned as corresponding secretary. His future address will be Greenwich, Conn. On motion a vote of thanks of the society was tendered him for his able services as corresponding secretary. Henry Bradley was elected to membership. Alex. McClelland, Alfred C. Cooke and Mr. Crossman were proposed.

A hundred Marie Louise violets exhibited by Mr. Joseph Bradley were awarded a certificate of merit; Mr. Claude Wilson and Mr. Able Weeks, judges. H. J. Rayner was duly elected as corresponding secretary. Mr. Joseph Bradley read a very able essay on the cultivation of violets, in the discussion that followed Messrs. Cockburn, Scott, Farlow and Mooney taking part.

Trade Conditions.

Probably business is fully as good as usual at this time of year or even better. A large amount of goods is being moved, prices ranging from very low to very fair. If anything is overplentiful it must be lilies, double violets and roses. Other materials in fair supply, except good carnations, smilax and Sprengeri, and these are not so scarce as they have been. An exception must be made of red roses, since they are much more plentiful and surely the demand seems smaller. Some large stores that have carried a stock of Beauties all winter do not now dare to purchase them on speculation, but perhaps carry a small stock of Brunners instead.

Various Items.

George Sutherland demands the right to label his 34 Hawley street establishment the most complete wholesale place in New England. He keeps everything compactly on one floor and has expanded laterally some four or five hundred square feet in two rooms; one for a wire worker and one for the manufacture of the Koral letter. This letter is working up a fine reputation, and he is now working the same idea into different designs. His new addition of territory also gives him a fine rear entrance to his store and a spacious private office.

Phil Feinstein has always been classified as a street faker, although he has had headquarters in an old street car on Portland street for the past few years, where he has actually carried on as regular a trade as many others in more pretentious structures. He had his little wooden block fitted with electric lights, cash register, etc., and backed it up against a good large ice chest. He has been a heavy buyer of good material in the city, besides contracting for the whole output of two or three quite large growers. But he has now come out of this chrysalis state and spread his wings in one of the largest rooms devoted to the business in the city. He sub-lets part of it, however, and his personality is amply large enough to fill the rest.

A Royal Visit to King Street.

"Half a league, half a league"—yes, a league and a half onward via Dorchester avenue we found the rose houses managed by Lawrence Cotter. They carry some 40,000 feet of glass, are somewhat of an antiquated pattern, but were built in a most thorough manner, and have been kept in good repair. The rose bushes are first-year plants, their own roots, not very heavy, but looking well and coming in good for spring trade, if there is any. One house is devoted to the Liberty rose, which showed a big lot of fine buds on long stems at the time of my visit, on Mar. 24. Another house shelters the finest lot of potted crimson Ramblers I ever saw, with a few specimens of the pink variety, which looks all right, but is not recommended by Mr. Cotter. But he is enthusiastic over a new climbing red rose bush, of which he has quite a supply. It makes a large plant, and throws a profusion of Brunner-like blossoms. Fine thing.

But we were out for lilies, and found nearly half the houses full of them, to be followed by summer roses.

Probably this is our largest collection of lilies next to that of E. N. Peirce & Sons. And they are good ones. But do not take my word for this. Go and see them or visit representatives at the New England Cut Flower Co. on Ordway place.

L. H. Foster's place, across the street, was also inspected. He will pardon me while I say it is really not an awfully interesting place to visit, even with the courteous treatment of himself and foreman. But it is a monument to his thrift and energy in that he manages to sell his plants when they get large enough to be really worth looking at. Billions of small palms and trillions of small ferns; the ground is full of them out there! And he has a raft of bedding material coming, too. J. S. Manter.

AN EMPLOYES' ASSOCIATION.

The editor of the Review suggests that I take up the question of an association and call upon employes in regard to forming an organization. Every interested employe will, I am sure, appreciate the editor's generosity in offering to devote a page or so of the Review to the interests of employes.

If it was at all possible I would be willing to do what I could. I would first issue a call to all employes around Chicago who are interested, inviting them to send in their names to the Review (if it would not be asking too much of the Review), said names to be handed over to me. I would then invite them to meet me at a given date and we could then go ahead with the organizing.

But the fact of it is I have been called away from the city and all I can hope to do in the case is to extend the call for names and ask the next most interested one to act in the matter.

W. K.

[If those interested will send in their names we will endeavor to arrange for a meeting for preliminary organization. —Ed.]

SAN FRANCISCO.

Trade Notes.

Domoto Bros., Fruitvale, lost $4,000 worth of plants in the wreck of the Rio Janeiro. They were imported from Chota, Japan, and consisted mostly of wistarias, bamboos, aspidistras and camellias for Easter. This firm will have a fine lot of longiflorums, 7,000 in number; also 4,000 Spanish irises, yellow and purple. Four houses 20x200, for roses and carnations, will be built this spring.

A. Fronmuller, Elmhurst, Alameda Co., will put up one house 25x150, for roses.

J. Gilmore, Elmhurst, Alameda Co., will erect one house 16x300, for roses. Mr. Gilmore will try his hand on a batch of Liberty, having secured a nice lot of two-year old plants. He thinks he can master this beautiful rose, but bad actor.

H. Yoshiike, Willow street, Oakland, has about 10,000 seedling carnations; quite a number are in pots, while box after box can be seen filled with seedlings as thick as grass. Three boxes of seeds from Lawson seed pods were sown this week. Lookout for something good.

E. W. McLellan, Burlingame, will have about 400 dozen lilies for Easter.

Fick & Faber will move to San Mateo.

Floriculture.

The landscape features and adornment of the grounds are of great importance at the Pan-American Exposition. In the Grand Court, in the Court of Fountains, in the Court of Lilies, the Court of Cypresses, in front of the Pergolas—in fact, everywhere that flowering plants and ornamental foliage plants can be planted, they will be lavishly used. The colors employed in the flower gardening will harmonize with the coloring of the surrounding buildings. There are over 600 large vases which will be filled with flowering plants and drooping vines, and many of them with specimen palms. Large quantities of palms have been brought from California, as well as oleanders, oranges and ornamental grasses. All these will be planted in the open ground as soon as the weather will permit.

Five hundred standard sweet bays have been imported from Europe. These have magnificent symmetrical heads and are six and seven feet high, and will be largely used to adorn the exterior of the largest buildings. A most effective feature will be the use of 500 tall, tapering cypress obtained from the south. They are thirty or forty feet high, now in boxes, and will be planted in the Court of Lilies and Court of Cypress. They are in most perfect order and will lend an oriental aspect to this part of the grounds which it would be impossible to obtain with any other material. The idea of using these cypresses was most happy, and their condition now reflects great credit on the ability of the landscape gardener.

The display of aquatic plants is very large. On the south margins of the East and West Mirror Lakes are planted in groups of ten to fifteen in one variety upward of 1,500 of the finest known species and varieties of the hardy nymphæas and nelumbiums. The Court of Fountains in front of the Horticulture Building, to the west of the Esplanade and in front of the Government Building on the east, will contain many of the finest nymphæas as well as other less known aquatic plants. The two grand basins, each 125 feet across and situated a few feet to the south of the Machinery Building and Liberal Arts Building, respectively, have been heated for the special welfare of the Giant Lily of the Amazon, the Victoria Regia, and the exotic nymphæas. The location of these are splendid, both for the appearance they will make and their sheltered location. Henry A. Dreer, of Philadelphia, is making at great expense the entire exhibit of aquatic plants.

The space devoted to horticultural exhibits, and covering some twenty acres, contains 200 beds of every size and design. A large part of it is known as the Music Garden, and there is no prettier or more pleasing spot in all the grounds. The absence largely of straight lines and the liberal planting of trees, with its already beautiful lawn, gives this part of the grounds a natural and park-like beauty. The demand for space in this garden for exhibits by the leading nurserymen and florists of the country has far exceeded the space available, but nearly all well-known firms are represented. Every familiar flower as well as the new and choice introductions will here be seen, and from groups of our native trees, evergreens and mountain plants to the humble but admired pansy.

All these beds, as well as those in the landscape department and in the courts and surrounding the buildings, are now filled with hyacinths, tulips and narcissus and other spring flowering bulbs, which insures a brilliant display during the month of May, to be followed later by the permanent summer blooming plants. In August last there were planted on the margins of the shrubbery borders 200,000 hardy perennials which will flower during the summer, giving not only color but naturalness to these borders. To those seeing the grounds now with the great diversity of levels, its sloping banks and terraces, its wooded mounds and leafy glades, its canals and lakes and lagoons, it seems almost incredible that less than one year ago today it was a flat plain with scarcely a rise of two feet in its mile of length and breadth.

The spacious and magnificent Horticulture Building will be devoted entirely to fruit. Every inch is already assigned to the several states. The two large conservatories leading from this building to the Graphic Arts Building on one side and to the Mines Building on the other, will be constantly gay with flowering and fine foliage plants. Beginning with the opening week in May and continuing throughout the summer will be held special flower shows of all the most popular flowers, for which medals and diplomas will be offered. The prominent specialists of the state are taking the liveliest interest in these exhibitions and will all exhibit. Particularly is this so in the case of carnations, roses, peonies, sweet peas, gladiolus, asters and chrysanthemums.

It is impossible to give in a few hundred words more than the merest outline of the work and beauty of horticulture at the Pan-American Exposition. It is not in one spot or one exhibit that the visitors will be charmed, but in the beauty and completeness of the whole.

William Scott.

Assistant Supt. of Horticulture in charge of Floriculture.

A GOOD WHEEL HOE.

We present herewith an engraving of a wheel hoe of a very simple but effective pattern that proved so satisfactory to Mr. W. E. Hall, the florist of Clyde, Ohio, that he is offering it to the trade and others. He says it beats any similar tool he has ever had. Its simplicity is certainly in its favor, and it would seem to be just the thing for cultivating carnations in the field.

NITRATE OF SODA vs. SULPHATE OF AMMONIA.

Of the several fertilizers that are used in the production of garden and farm crops none are better known than the two important sources of nitrogen—nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia—and judiciously applied none are of greater value for several of the principal crops. It may be assumed that with a fuller appreciation of the aid they are in certain cases able to render there will be a material increase in their use, and it is therefore desirable the cultivator should be acquainted with the comparative returns which may be expected from these manures, and with the conditions under which they may be the most profitably employed. Hence the exhaustive paper contributed by Professor Warrington to the current issue of the Royal Agricultural Society's Journal on the comparative value of these two fertilizers is of much interest, and fully deserve the careful consideration of both gardeners and farmers. As the author points out in his opening remarks, sulphate of ammonia and nitrate of soda have long been competitors for the cultivator's favor, and the competition is likely to continue, as the market price of each influences the market price of the other. It is consequently desirable the cultivator should be acquainted with the conditions under which each attains its maximum efficiency, as without this knowledge he is not in a position to employ them to the greatest profit, or to take advantage of the variations in their market prices. As the paper occupies nearly fifty pages, it is not possible to do more than very briefly refer to a few of the conclusions at which Professor Warrington has arrived as the result of his investigations.

Although sulphate of lime and sulphate of ammonia are chemically distinct substances, not one of the proximate constituents of one salt is found in the other. In their use as manures they become, however, far more alike. While the nitrate of soda undergoes but little change in the soil the sulphate of ammonia is profoundly altered. By contact under favorable conditions with a moist soil containing carbonate of lime the sulphate of ammonia is finally resolved into two salts, the sulphate and nitrate of calcium; and the mention of this fact will show that the presence of lime in the soil is essential to its efficiency. According to the results of the investigation made by Professor Warrington, sulphate of ammonia cannot be profitably used as a manure on land destitute of lime, and in its use on soils containing a large percentage of carbonate of lime the best results are obtained by covering it with soil by plough or spade, or rake or harrow, immediately after its application. Even on ordinary land the best results are obtained from mixing it with the soil. Although they may be successfully used as a top dressing for some crops, ammonia salts do not become available as plant food till they have been converted into nitrate of calcium, and this nitrification will not take place in a dry soil, but in most arable land it will quickly occur in showery weather. In consequence of the various changes proceeding more slowly, the effect of sulphate of ammonia is more gradual than that of nitrate of soda, and is especially prolonged in soils containing little lime or when associated with organic manures.

On the other hand, nitrate of soda may be successfully used on land containing no lime, and as it is immediately available as plant food and distributes itself in the soil more rapidly than the nitrate of calcium arising from the nitrification of sulphate, is more suitable for use as top dressings to growing crops and for application at a late period in the growth of the crop. In dry seasons nitrate of soda gives a better return for the same quantity of nitrogen applied; and the greater crop frequently given by it is in part due to the soda which it supplies, the soda acting beneficially both in the soil and in the plant. The produce yielded by sulphate of ammonia is more dependent on the presence in the soil of an abundant supply of cinereal plant food or ash constituents than is the case when nitrate of soda is employed. This is probably due to the power the last named fertilizer has of acting upon the potash and other alkalies contained in the soil, and rendering them available as plant food.

To state the chief points briefly, sulphate of ammonia is the most suitable for use where the soil is naturally moist and contains a liberal percentage of lime, and for crops that are of comparatively slow growth, while nitrate of soda gives excellent results on soils that are naturally dry and contains but little calcareous matter. With regard to the influence of these two manures on the bulk and quality of the crop, it would appear that the largest yield is in the majority of cases obtained from nitrate of soda, and the highest quality produce from sulphate of ammonia. From the conclusions thus briefly stated it will be seen that an estimate of their value must not be wholly based on their percentage of nitrogen, and that to insure their profitable utilization considerable knowledge of their distinctive characteristics is necessary.—Gardeners' Magazine.

ASPARAGUS AND CABBAGE.

In a paper read before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society Prof. H. T. Fernald recommended arsenate of lead for destroying the asparagus beetle, which has caused market gardeners so much trouble.

He said that the cabbage worm was, in spite of nearly fifty years' experience with it, one of the most difficult cabbage insects to control. For that purpose he recommended the use of paris green, explaining why any danger in the use of this insecticide was more apparent than real and stating his experience in its use, and also the practice of the large market gardeners around Philadelphia where this treatment has been followed for fifteen years with excellent results.

...DREER'S...
Novelties and Specialties

Campanula Isophylla Mayii.

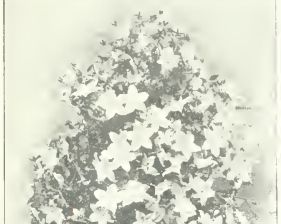
In this new Bell-Flower we have one of the most important and valuable novelties of the season, and a plant that with only ordinary care can be grown by anyone; a plant for everybody. It succeeds best as a pot plant grown in a half shady situation, and may either be permitted to trail over the sides of the pot or staked and grown upright; under either condition it becomes one mass of flowers of a pleasing light blue color, and are produced continuously through the summer. Strong stock plants in 3-inch pots, 60 cents each; $5.00 per dozen. Good young plants in 2-inch pots, 25 cents each; $2.50 per dozen.

Deutzia Gracilis Rosea (new).

Identical with Gracilis in general habit, but with flowers fully double the size of that graceful variety, to which is added the additional charm of being suffused with a delicate rosy tint, just sufficient to relieve the dead white which is objectionable in the type, and which will undoubtedly place it in the front rank of shrubs for winter forcing. A limited lot of one-year old plants. $2.00 per dozen; $15.00 per 100.

Anemone Japonica Queen Charlotte.

The finest of all the Anemones and a grand summer and fall cut flower. Strong 2½-inch pots, 75 cents per dozen; $6.00 per 100



Campanula Isophylla Mayii.

Polygonum Baldschuanicum.

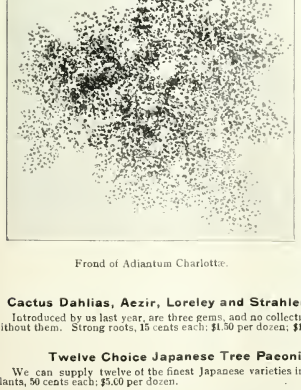
A hardy climber of recent introduction from the mountains of Turkestan. It is a very rapid growth, frequently growing from 10 to 12 feet high in one season. The stems are twining and cling for support to any object within reach. Every branchlet terminates in a panicle of white flowers, which are produced to the greatest profusion from July to September. A plant that is certain to meet with popular favor. Strong plants, 75 cents each.

Tuberous Begonia, "Duke Zeppelin."

A most useful and attractive variety that should soon become a favorite for bedding, possessing the great advantage over other tuberous-rooted Begonias of delighting in full sunshine. It is of dwarf habit, growing from 6 to 8 inches high, throwing up well above the foliage numberless stems bearing full, double dazzling scarlet flowers, giving the whole plant a brightness, grace and elegance difficult to describe. Strong bulbs, 20 cents each; $2.00 per dozen; $15.00 per 100.

Frilled Tuberous-Rooted Begonia

A most unique form, with very large single flowers which are entirely distinct from anything heretofore offered, the petals being wavy and beautifully frilled on the edges, similar to the newer forms of Petunias. A decided acquisition. Strong bulbs, 25 cent each; $2.50 per dozen.



Frond of Adiantum Charlottæ.

New Adiantum Charlottæ.

Our illustration gives a faint idea of the beauty and grace of this new Maidenhair; it is entirely distinct from all other varieties, and even more graceful than A. gracillimum, and possessing the advantage of having much stouter, stiffer stems, on account of which it forms more shapely plants, and increases its value for cutting purposes. Specimens of this handsome sort shown at the exhibitions of the Penna. Hort. Society during the past two seasons attracted the attention of all lovers of Ferns. Strong, 4-inch pots, 35 cents each; $3.50 per dozen.

Montbretia Crocosmiæflora Germania.

This new giant Montbretia has been under our observation for the past four years. It grows about 3½ feet high, is of sturdy habit, much branched, and produces most graceful spikes in the greatest profusion. They are well furnished with large six-petalled, widely expanded flowers, measuring over 3 inches across, probably the largest of the genus. The color is a rich glowing scarlet, shading to brilliant orange, with a blood-red throat. The buds and also the reverse of the petals are blood-red, a most striking combination of colors, making a grand effect. 20 cents each; $2.00 per dozen; $15.00 per 100.

Montbretia Germania.

Cactus Dahlias, Aezir, Loreley and Strahlen Krone.

Introduced by us last year, are three gems, and no collection is complete without them. Strong roots, 15 cents each; $1.50 per dozen; $12.00 per 100.

Twelve Choice Japanese Tree Paeonias.

We can supply twelve of the finest Japanese varieties in strong heavy plants, 50 cents each; $5.00 per dozen.

Yucca Filamentosa Bicolor.

This elegant plant has proven entirely hardy with us the past winter. We offer good, one-year-old plants, 35 cents each; $3.50 per dozen.

Our new Quarterly Trade List which has only recently been distributed, offers a complete line of all the leading novelties, together with a full line of seasonable stocks, with full lists of our specialties, as Decorative Plants, Water Lilies and Aquatics, and the most complete list of Hardy Perennials offered in this country. If you have failed to receive a copy advise us.

HENRY A. DREER, 714 Chestnut St., PHILADELPHIA.

OSAGE, IOWA.

The florists of this section of northern Iowa and southern Minnesota have all had a very prosperous winter and have had no trouble to sell at good prices all the cut flowers they could grow.

We are all on very friendly terms and held our fourth semi-annual picnic at Charles City, Ia., Jan. 24 and 25, with Mr. M. H. Wetherbee. There were present at this meeting Symonds and Cadwell from Decorah, Perry from Cresco, Klemm from Mason City, Springer from New Hampton, Hall Bros. from Osage, and Kinsman from Austin, Minn. We all had a very pleasant time and gathered much valuable information through an exchange of experiences with different varieties under varying treatment. A committee was appointed to report upon the advisability of forming a Florists' Association, but the committee thought it best to postpone forming an organization until our next meeting, which will be held in August at Austin, Minn., with Mr. A. N. Kinsman. H.

CORRECTION.

In the cut flower quotations in the double page advertisement of Messrs. McKellar & Winterson in our last issue the printer made some errors that caused stock to be quoted in dozens when it should have been in hundreds. The error was undoubtedly apparent to our readers, who are familiar with such quotations, and hardly need be told whether the rate is per dozen or per hundred, but in case there are any who were mystified we will explain that only the American Beauties were to be quoted per dozen and the remainder should have been per 100.

HEATING.

In reply to the inquiry of Mr. J. G. W., in a very short house he could get fair results by running the 4-inch overhead main to the far end of the house, and the returns under the benches to the boiler, which should be placed with its return connection just below the ground level, but I would not advise this on a long house used for commercial purposes.

In order to get the most effective and economical results the boiler should be placed with its flow connect on below the ground line. The cost of a cellar or pit is not a serious matter, even were the ground to be wet, compared with the ultimate economy and the more perfect results thus obtained.

Four-inch water pipes give good results, especially when but little attention can be given to the heating of the houses, but with good management far better results are obtained by a circulation through 2-inch pipes.

HENRY W. GIBBONS.

New York.

We have received a copy of the report of the Committee on Entomology by Professor F. M. Webster, reprinted from the Ohio Horticultural Report for 1900. It contains much valuable information regarding treatment for insect pests in the nursery and orchard. The report shows that over 150 nurseries were inspected, that 7,270 trees were destroyed, and that 22,033 trees and 28,700 shrubs were treated by the inspectors. Prof. Webster has also issued a reprint from the journal of the Columbus (Ohio) Horticultural Society of his "Notes on the Longicorn Beetles Affecting Growing Nursery Stock," which is illustrated by several engravings.

South Framingham, Mass.—C. J. Power, the well-known florist, died March 24, aged 76 years. He retired from active business several years ago.

Vincennes, Ind.—W. A. Rieman will add several new houses this season.

Trade Conditions.

Trade has been fairly good to date, and the first effects of Easter are felt. The weather has been unsettled for the past two weeks and considerable anxiety is felt whether it will continue so. Considerable stock is to be seen around and the weather will have to be good to unload it all. Though not overplentiful, lilies show up in good quantities and of good quality; azaleas just about enough and good. Spiraea shows up rather heavy, but being particularly good should go off without any trouble. There will also be some fine Deutzias, which so far have sold well. A good amount of lilies will also be offered. About the best thing seen is some well grown Ramblers, the Park Floral Company having a good lot of them. The stores all lean to baskets, and no doubt a big trade will be done in plant baskets.

The supply of cut flowers will perhaps not be equal to that of last year. Still there should be enough to go around when one stops to consider the plant trade. By the time you are through seling plants there is very little time left to sell flowers.

News Items.

Miss Simpkins, for many years an able hand at the Park Floral Company's store, is on the sick list and will not be with us this Easter. Her loss will be felt very much, for she was well liked by the customers and was an artistic worker and a hustler.

I was glad to see that the "P. F. N. B. L." (is that right?) has started something new in the way of bowling. I think the idea of a three-man tournament a good one, but should not like to see the old six-man team interfered with in any way. Shall be pleased to send in a few suggestions a little later on.

NOT BAD SOWING.

Dear Editor: I notice that in your issue of March 21 a correspondent signing himself "Phil" has attempted to impress upon my friends and the public that the sowing done by myself or under my management caused a failure of the greenhouse end of the business I sold last year, and suggests that the results will be more satisfactory when the present owners can reap from their own sowing.

"Phil" has no foundation for such an attack upon my place and men. He has been falsely informed or has allowed his imagination to run away with him. The houses that were planted with roses at the time the place was turned over to my successor were in first-class condition and had made good, vigorous growth, producing good flowers until some time in November, when for some reasons that I had nothing to do with they had a very bad setback and many were thrown out. The carnations were in the field and were good, healthy stock. I turned the place over the first of September, 1900.

In defense of my foreman and all others in my employ, I remain, yours,

E. Hippard.

[We feel sure that our correspondent meant no reflection upon Mr. Hippard or his employes in the paragraph referred to. However, we give space to the communication.—Ed.]

FRANKLIN, PA.

W. T. Bell & Sons have bought twenty-seven acres of land at Niles Station, on the L. S. & M. S. R. R., five miles from this place, and early in the season will build two carnation houses, each 27x200 feet; the product from which will be sent to their larger place in Franklin, or shipped direct to customers. Water from a fine spring will be piped more than half a mile, and will give a pressure of sixty pounds in the houses.

A large stock of young carnation plants in excellent condition is now in two-inch pots ready for planting out at the new place as soon as the weather will permit; and a portion of the material for the buildings, including glass, has already been bought. This addition will give them 35,000 square feet of glass to use.

W. T. Bell, the father, has been engaged in business here as a florist for more than thirty-two years; while the sons, John and Philip, were admitted to the partnership three years since.

Piqua, O.—The Piqua Floral Co. are building a three-quarter span house 12x65 for carnations. They had fair success last season and will endeavor to improve their stock this year. They have opened a seed and cut flower store down town with Mr. F. H. Frisch in charge.

Catskill, N. Y.—Henry Hansen reports that trade has been brisk all winter with an excellent call for carnations. Easter promises to be ahead of last year. He has a fine lot of lilies and bulbous stock in prime condition. He will add another house for carnations this season.

Anyone having Iris Kaempferii would find ready customers by offering it in our advertising columns.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Easter Outlook.

Will the supply of cut flowers be sufficient to meet the Easter trade is an important question asked by all the retailers. After making a tour of the largest growing establishments, the writer can safely say that we were never better prepared for a plant trade than we are this Easter. Probably the best collection, especially in bulbous stock, was seen at the greenhouses of Samuel Murray. He says it will all sell at his Broadway store this week, and with favorable weather his expectations will be fully realized. In one house was seen 1,500 lily plants with scarcely an inferior bud.

Albert Barbe is well supplied with all the leading plants and his roses and carnations are coming on in full crop. He is cutting a few blooms of the Liberty rose which are gems and we hope it will be grown here more extensively another year. Trade through the month of March was very satisfactory; many report an increase over the same month a year ago and very little stock wasted.

W. L. Rock is branching out and will soon open a second store, which will be located on that part of Elsworth street familiarly known as "Petticoat Lane," the shoppers favorite thoroughfare. The feature of the new place will be a fourteen-foot display window. Mr. Rock will also become a grower and in connection with Mr. Charles Heite, of Merriam, Kan., will form the Rock-Heite Company. Ground has been purchased on Troost avenue, south of the city, within a half-mile of beautiful Forest Hill Cemetery and a better location could not be selected. The enterprise will start this spring with 35,000 feet of glass, the houses to be 300 feet long. The firm intends to grow for the wholesale trade, for which we have a promising field. Both are young men of ability. Up to the present time Mr. Heite has made a specialty of growing carnations in which he has been unusually success-ful and with Mr. Rock's knowledge of the requirements of this market we bespeak the success of the new firm.

Recent visitors were Mr. Wirt, of Parsons, Kan., who reports trade good in the sunflower state, and the strictly business Walter Mott, of Philadelphia.

H. J. M.

THOMPSONVILLE, CONN.—Mr. D. Wm. Brainard made his eighth annual Easter display April 3 to 6 and issued a very neatly printed announcement of same to his customers.

SAN JOSE, CAL.—Over $6,000 will be expended in making the rose carnival a success, this being in addition to what will be done by individuals. Nineteen floats have been already promised.

SEEDS.

Fresh choice flower seeds. We raised a breeze with our fine flowers last year, 2,000 pkts. of seed for sale. The largest packets you ever bought for the money, of the following kinds: Asters tall, Asters dwarf, Foxglove, Canterbury Bells, Wall Flowers, Verbenas, Candytuft, Scabiosa, Japanese Pinks. All in mixed colors. The following in separate colors: Double Hollyhock, white, pink and yellow. Snapdragon, white and red, 6c a packet postpaid. Mrs. R. Walz, Wadsworth, Medina Co., Ohio.

Burpee's Earliest of All is the Sweet Pea for florists. Notwithstanding their dwarf habit and neat slender foliage, the plants are of vigorous growth and come into bloom always ten days to two weeks in advance of the Extra Early Blanche Ferry, which has been heretofore a week ahead of all other varieties. The flowers are as large as those of the regular strains of Blanche Ferry, and have long stout stems, making them entirely satisfactory for cutting; they are borne in close clusters of three, all facing one way. The standards are a bright, rich pink, while the wings are nearly pure white. Burpee's "Earliest of All" is not only the earliest to bloom in open ground but is also the most desirable for forcing under glass for winter cut flowers. The dwarf habit of this variety renders it much more easily grown on the benches, admits of closer planting, and from seed sown during the latter part of August blooms may be cut during the holidays, while with the taller varieties no blooms could be had before February or March. Per pkt. 5 cts.; oz. 6 cts.; ¼ lb. 20 cts; per lb. 60 cts; 5 lbs. or more at 55 cts. per lb.

PLANTS HAVE SOULS.

So Says a Belgian Scientist.

The lilies of the field, proclaims a foremost scholar of Belgium, have embryonic souls, with rudiments of memory, reason, germs of habits and perception, and clearly if roughly sketched outlines of every other essential requisite of soul life. This he has demonstrated in certain painstaking observations and experimentations, which he announced, with frequent intermittent accompaniment of applause, at a recent conference of the Association of the Students of Science. The scholar in question is Professor L. Errera of the University of Brussels, and he regards the physiology of vegetables as a Cinderella among the natural sciences, whose sisters, human and animal physiology, bask in high places under the homage of servants, while she, in degrading humility, serves to attend to a little necessary rough work. She is quite unknown in her true character.

With the minutest and most succinct analysis of his subject Professor Errera demonstrates startlingly and precisely how mistaken philosophers, physiologists and even botanists have been in so completely passing over this phase of nearly one-half the organic world.

Botanists, he says, have contented themselves with merely a picture of some flowers and some plants, with an herbarium and a microscope. Those who study into physiology in the general acceptation of the term deal with a scientific study of the life of beings which move, which think, which react upon stimulants, vividly and briskly. They do not take into account the fact that plants present movements, experience sensations and manifest reactions; that the term physiology is ordinarily applied to everything that has life, saving only plants. Vegetable physiology does not exist except in name.

As for philosophers, they, too, have come short, says Professor Errera, in forgetting that under the denomination vegetable physiology there has been grouped a collection of phenomena of the highest interest. They do not seem to have perceived this because in any attempts to classify knowledge they have assigned vegetable physiology only the most insignificant position.

INDIANS BUILD A RAILROAD.

Out in Wyoming the Burlington railroad is building a line down into the Big Horn Basin country, and the contractors succeeded in interesting a lot of Crow and Sioux Indians from the reservation near by, and engaged a number of them on the grade. At first they were lined up each with a scraper and a team of horses and at the word, with a yell, they started to race, that being the sport dearest to the Indian heart. But after the "boss" got them in line again, and explained that they were there to "move dirt" and not to race horses things went more smoothly, and most of the bucks have developed into good workmen.

And so it happens, that within a few miles of the battlefield where Custer and his brave men of the Seventh Cavalry made their last stand in 1876, these warriors, and sons of warriors, many of whom no doubt took part in the massacre, are peacefully taking up the white man's burden and "make 'em heap sweat."

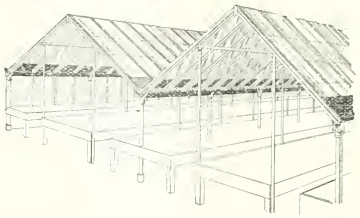
THE STANDARD
Duplex Metal Gutters,



Like our battleships and other valuable inventions, the so pretended all-wise criticized them long before they could prove to the world their efficiency. But such judges have long been relegated to the deep and fathomless sea of ignorance and are still the laughing stock of the better and more intelligent judges.

Just so the Duplex Gutter will get its unjust awards long before it can establish its superior qualities over any other in the same line. I make a gutter for my customer, and when he asks for a steel, wrought iron, cast iron, copper or zinc, he gets just what he asks for, and at reasonable prices for any weight he desires. I will guarantee a more lasting and perfect construction than can be made by using any other kind of a gutter, with no drip at all. I claim nothing that reflects upon my construction in order to injure the merits of any other party's gutter.

Notice the following questions: How long does a cast iron gutter last when erected upon 2-inch gas pipe made of thin steel and subject to the moisture of the cement in the earth (pipe is now most all made of steel), and lasts only four years as claimed by some advertisers. How long will a house last that uses steel wire to hold it together, when its life is claimed only four years? All well informed people will laugh at such contradictory statements. We all know that bridges are not made of cast iron. Why? Because they would fall of their own weight unless a support were given them every four or five feet, therefore steel and iron are used and they last more than four years. Neglected and unpainted, how long do you suppose a piece of ¼-inch steel or iron will last suspended from the earth in a greenhouse? Have you found any steel wire stakes that were corroded only where they came in contact with the earth, in four years? I have some in use over twelve years and they are as good above the earth as when bought. Now if you used what we also make gutters of, cast iron, copper and if desired zinc (very little higher in price than cast iron) what would their life be? My gutter must be a painful invention.

Send for my catalogue giving plain facts for intelligent persons to study. Yours truly,

E. HIPPARD, YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO.

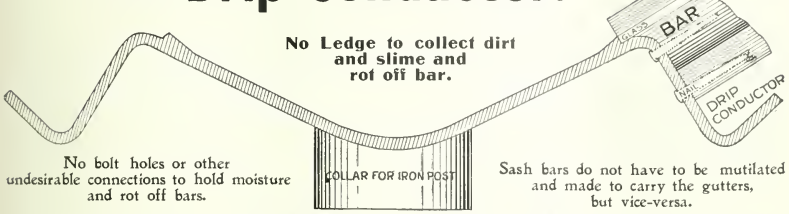
The Original Garland Valley Gutter and Drip Conductor.



The Gutter is the Foundation of the House.

It has stood a ten-year test and I can Warrant that it will last fifty years longer. Will outlast one dozen galvanized or steel gutters, as steel is the poorest material for greenhouse use. No breakage of glass by frost or ice. Only seven inches of shade in December. No drips from condensation when proper humidity is maintained within. No wires to hold bars to gutter; wires are for supporting ridge pole without using ridge pole posts. Simplest and easiest to erect, never sags or gets out of line. Made in my own foundry, of No. 1 Lake Superior cast iron. Do not make a mistake by putting in untested devices, but get into the band wagon with the successful growers who have tested the Garland Iron Gutter and Drip Conductor. The following is a partial list—write them:

THE EASTER TRADE.

We print below reports from all sections of the country on the Easter Trade, that most important event of the year to the florist, and are pleased to note that they show the trade has increased to a marked degree this year except in sections where extremely unfavorable weather conditions prevailed. And in many places the business was ahead of previous years in spite of unfavorable weather, which is a truly encouraging indication for the future. On the whole we think the trade has good reason to be more than satisfied with the average results.

TOLEDO, O.—Krueger Bros. report Easter trade as about 20 per cent better than last year, with prices ruling about the same.

MUSCATINE, IA.—Last week being rainy and cloudy with the exception of only two days a poor Easter trade was the result.

PEKIN, ILL.—The demand for blooming plants and cut flowers was much greater than the supply and therefore trade was good.

UNIONTOWN, PA.—Barton Bros. report the Easter trade as the best they ever had. The demand soon outran the supply and prices were well maintained.

NEW ALBANY, IND.—Anders Rasmussen reports: "Easter trade was excellent. Everything sold out clean and could have sold more. Prices about the same as last year."

ROCKFORD, ILL.—H. W. Buckbee reports Easter trade as very satisfactory and fully 30 per cent in advance of last year. Harrisii lilies were in great demand. Carnations were also favorites.

TRENTON, N. J.—C. Ribsam & Son report Easter trade as the best they ever had. Outside of lilies the greatest demand was for azaleas and hyacinths. Fern balls sold well.

FREMONT, NEB.—C. H. Green reports it was the best Easter he ever had. And in addition to this, funerals, weddings and parties have been numerous and kept trade lively.

AURORA, ILL.—R. Rees & Son say Easter trade was better than last year, with a great demand for pot plants in bloom. Cut flowers were sold out clean at 11 o'clock in the morning.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—Easter trade was satisfactory but sales would have been 25 per cent larger had Saturday been clear instead of a very stormy day. All blooming plants sold well.

ST JOSEPH, MO.—L. J. Stuppy reports sales probably 25 per cent larger than last year, the increase being in calls for plants. Not much call for Beauties. Other roses, carnations, bulb stuff and violets sold well.

LAWRENCE, KANS.—A. Whitcomb & Son say Easter trade was about the same as last year. Bad weather made the supply of cut flowers short. Blooming plants sold well. The call for lilies was greater than could be supplied.

GALESBURG, ILL.—Giesler & Drury report Easter trade this year better than ever before and that they cleaned up in fine shape. All good blooming plants sold well. Easter lilies preferred. They displayed all their stock in their new store on Main street.

ALTOONA, PA.—Easter trade here was excellent, exceeding that of any previous year. Stock was fine and apparently abundant, but the demand was fully equal and in cut flowers rather in excess of it. Today (Monday) there is very little available stock in sight.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.—The Misses Wilson report: Cut flowers were more in demand than ever before, also lilies, ferns, begonias, etc., in pots. Everything sold, even to the pansies and verbenas early sold out clean. Weather gloomy but warm, making delivery easy.

MOBILE, ALA.—C. Ravier & Sons report Easter trade as 25 per cent better than last year. Easter lilies were in great demand, but unfortunately they had none in bloom and had to offer callas, spiræas, roses and carnations. They have not yet heard from the other florists.

OTTUMWA, IA.—C. Kranz reports the best Easter trade ever known. He had a large supply on hand, including over 200 pot lilies in full bloom, 1800 roses, 2200 carnations, violets in abundance and many other small flowers. At 10 o'clock he was sold out of everything.

NEWPORT, R. I.—James Gohn writes that everything was sold out and could not meet the demand. Trade was about 25 per cent larger than last year. Carnations and violets very scarce. Weather very dark. Have not seen the sun for six days. Rain and fog all the week.

GALENA, ILL.—B. F. Vandervate reports a larger Easter trade than ever before, in the plant line as well as in cut flowers. He was entirely cleaned out of cut flowers, and everything sold well. He made a large display in a downtown from the garden, notwithstanding the woods are full of wild flowers.

DAYTON, O.—H. H. Ritter says Easter demand was greatly increased over last year and better prices were obtained. Lilies were in great demand and in good supply; in fact, everything in bulbous stock, that was much praised by the local press.

SHARON, PA.—John Murchie reports that he believes all the Sharon florists sold out clean. Volume of trade was about the same as last year. Plants more in demand. Prices a little better.

Supply was sufficient for demand except lilies in pots, of which more could have been sold.

Dubuque, Ia.—W. A. Harkett reports sales as slightly ahead of last year, with prices about the same except a slight advance on lilies. There was more demand for medium priced flowering plants and less for expensive foliage plants. Stock was plentiful except for a slight shortage in Harrisii and pink roses.

Sharon, Pa.—M. J. O'Brien reports: "Easter trade was fully 20 per cent greater than last year, with better prices. Flowering plants sold well, considering a continued rain all day Saturday. In cut flowers carnations had the call, with not enough to supply the demand. Roses went fairly well at good prices."

Kankakee, Ill.—Faber Bros. report Easter trade as much better than last year, with better prices for all kinds of flowers. Calla lilies brought $3.50 a dozen; Harrisii, $6.00; American Beauties, $8.00; Bride, Bridesmaid and other roses, $1.50 to $2.00; carnations, 50 to 80 cents; violets, $2.50 per 100.

Bay City, Mich.—Boehringer Bros. report Easter trade as generally satisfactory, sales of both cut flowers and plants being larger than last year, with somewhat better prices. Lilies were scarce on account of the disease. It was noticeable that the better grades of plants sold quicker than the cheaper ones.

Petoskey, Mich.—S. J. Long reports Easter trade for this vicinity as fully 50 per cent better than any previous year. Everything saleable was ordered by Wednesday. Grand Rapids had to be heavily drawn upon for stock. Violets in pans sold like hot cakes. Pot plants sold equally well with cut flowers.

Muncie, Ind.—S. Humfeld reports Easter trade as 75 per cent better than last year. Roses short. Greater demand for fancy carnations. Supply of bulbous stock ample. Great demand for pot plants. Some well grown cinerarias in 7-inch pots brought $1.00 each. Azaleas, lilacs and rhododendrons sold well.

Leavenworth, Kans.—R. C. Hinz reports that Easter trade was 50 per cent better than last year, with a lively call for everything. There was plenty of plants with the exception of hyacinths and lilies. There was a shortage in all cut flowers except lilies. A good many lily flowers were shipped in, but no plants.

Birmingham, Ala.—C. H. Reed reports: "The Easter trade was never so satisfactory as this year. Should judge there was three times more cut flowers sold than any previous year in the history of this place. The demand for potted plants was beyond the supply. Prices for everything good and everything sold out."

Bridgeport, Conn.—James Horan & Son report: "It rained most all the time. A plant trade almost entirely. Plenty of plants left over and plenty of flowers, too, except violets. The meanest Easter Saturday in years. Rich customers bought well. Poorer customers didn't get a chance to get out. Not up to last year at all."

Easter Plant Arrangements. No. 2.

Memphis, Tenn.—Otto Schwill & Co. report an exceptionally good Easter trade, in fact double that of last year, which they credit largely to the improved general business conditions in the south. Their stock was good in quality, especially the lilies, and in addition to their own they had many shipped them from Chicago.

Danvers, Mass.—E. & C. Woodman report weather unfavorable for trade. Lilies in good condition; fine stocky plants, 3 to 8 flowers, Japan stock. Neighboring towns and cities we hear sold lilies as low as 15 cents a flower at retail. This competition and the weather caused a falling off in amount of sales as compared with last year.

Quincy, Ill.—C. F. W. Gentemann reports Easter trade as better than ever before. The demand for lilies, roses, carnations and violets was great and all sold at good prices. All blooming plants sold well, especially potted hyacinths, daffodils, azaleas and lily of the valley. All the florists were sold out by noon Sunday and all are well pleased.

Massilon, O.—Easter sales were about 25 per cent larger than last year with an increasing demand for flowering plants. Lilies, azaleas and bulbous stock in pots and pans sold especially well. In cut flowers carnations took the lead. Roses, bulbous stock and violets were in good supply and sold well. Prices about the same as last year.

Hornellsville, N. Y.—W. A. Wettlin reports: "An increase of about twenty per cent over last year. The only shortage was in carnations, which sold for $1 per dozen; the most we ever received for them in former years was 75 cents. The plant trade was about the same as last year, but the weather was very bad, which no doubt affected that line."

Hamilton, Ont.—E. G. Brown reports: "Trade here this Easter was the best we ever had. Although lilies were in short supply what there was brought better prices. Roses, carnations and violets sold well; also very good demand for valley, which seems to be getting more in demand each season. In plants lilies took the lead, followed by good white azaleas."

Little Rock, Ark.—Tipton & Hurst say: "Easter trade was very heavy. We had to cease taking orders and selling at noon Saturday. Could have sold twice as many cut flowers had we had them. Demand heavy for Easter lilies and carnations. Had a large shipment in as well as our own stock. Demand for plants good, especially Easter lilies, which were in short supply."

Cleveland, O.—The weather was miserable, a cold rain falling all day Saturday, yet we were rushed, reports J. M. Gasser & Co. Had all we could do. Sold more plants than ever before and could not supply the demand for violets. Roses did not sell so well as on previous Easters; in fact there was quite a falling off in that line. Not much call for valley.

Elmira, N. Y.—H. N. Hoffman reports that in spite of a stormy week and steady pouring rain all day Saturday the Easter trade showed a good increase over last year. Any sort of good blooming plant selling at from 50 cents up went readily, especially azaleas, lilacs, rhododendrons, deutzias and bulbs in pans. In cut flowers carnations and violets were in most demand. Lilies scarce.

Janesville, Wis.—Rentschler Bros. report Easter trade as 25 per cent better than ever before. They were lucky enough to have 150 Harrisii plants in bloom and sold out clean at an average price of $1.00 per plant. Next to lilies the call was for azaleas, spireas and daisies. In cut flowers violets, carnations and daffodils sold best. In all trade was very satisfactory.

Winona, Minn.—John Wunder reports Easter trade as about 25 per cent larger than last year. There was a good demand for plants and everything in bloom sold well. There was a big demand for lilies and but few to offer. He lost two-thirds of his Harrisii. The call for carnations was larger than for roses, though both sold well. He had to sell roses at $1 and carnations at 60 cents a dozen.

Easter Plant Arrangements. No. 3.

Ogdensburg, N. Y.—Mrs. Thos. Lawrence reports: "Easter trade in cut flowers was ten per cent better than last year. The demand was chiefly in lilies, roses, carnations, violets and daffodils. Plant trade was heavy, fully fifty per cent better than last year. Azaleas, hyacinths, lilies, daffodils and tulips in pots and pans, and Rambler roses, all sold well. Plenty of mud, rain and wind both Saturday and Sunday."

Rochester, N. Y.—F. Schlegel & Sons report: "Cut flower sales were about the same as last year, but more carnations could have been sold if to be had; there was a shortage of them. In blooming plants there was an increase of 10 per cent over last year, azaleas, lilies, H. P. and Crimson Rambler roses taking the lead. Good rhododendrons also found ready buyers. More small plants could have been disposed of.

Hamilton, O.—Theo. Bock says that Easter trade was very good. He had a large lot of flowers, but ran short in carnations and somewhat so in roses. Sold clean out of Murillo, LaReine and Cottage Maid tulips, of which he had a large lot. Had daffodils and Romans to spare. Lilies in pots could have been largely sold, but there were none to be had in quantity. Volume of trade was fully up to last year.

Lansing, Mich.—Robert Mann reports: "Easter trade was very good. All the florists report the best trade they ever had. The call was mostly for pot plants, roses, carnations and lilies; also a good demand for bulb stuff. Trade was fully 25 per cent better than last year. All stock was well cleaned up. The Industrial School had a very elaborate decoration and pretty exercises, which are to be repeated next Sunday."

Pittsfield, Mass.—John White reports Easter sales equal to those of previous years. Had not the weather conditions been very unfavorable double the quantity of stock could have been sold. In cut flowers, carnations led with roses second. Violets sold well. In plants lilies were in greatest demand, azaleas, second. Apparently, blooming plants are in greater demand each year. Anything that is well grown can be sold.

Jackson, Mich.—Lee & Co. report that stock was pretty well cleaned up, although on account of rain most of the orders came by telephone. Lilies, roses, etc., were all in good shape and as good in quality as ever seen here. Prices ranged lower than last year—Daffodils, 40 to 75 cents a dozen; roses, $1.00 to $1.25; carnations, 50 cents to $1.00; violets, 25 cents; lilies, 20 cents a flower. All the florists report a good trade. Violets sold exceptionally well.

Davenport, Iowa.—Otto Klingbeil reports a very good Easter trade. Lilies, genistas, Marguerites, calla lilies, rhododendrons, Azalea mollis, lilacs and lots of other blooming plants sold like hot cakes. Roses and carnations were rather scarce and poor on account of the cloudy weather for the preceding two weeks. Violets, lily of the valley and bulb goods were plentiful and sold at higher prices than last year. Altogether we had a very satisfactory Easter trade and pretty good weather for delivering our plants.

Berlin, Ont.—A. H. Ewing says: "Easter trade about 50 per cent larger than last year, and more spread over from Thursday to Monday instead of being mostly on the Saturday. Roses plentiful, selling retail at $1.50 to $2.50. Carnations very short; the people wanted them badly, and many would not take other flowers in place of them. Flowering plants and ferns sold well. Palms were not in demand. Violets and valley were of good quality and sold well. Tulips and daffs were a drug and not much wanted."

Duluth, Minn.—W. W. Seekins reports that notwithstanding that it rained all day on Saturday, he did the largest Easter business in his experience. Trade in plants was double that of a year ago; cut flower trade about equal to last year. He made a fine display, as did other florists, and this no doubt stimulated trade, as the effect was much praised. Duluth people are buying more flowers every year and are requiring more decorations from the florist, where formerly they did their own decorating.

Oskaloosa, Ia.—The Kemble Floral Co. reports: "The business done here this Easter was fully 25 per cent larger than last year, and the demand larger than the supply, owing to dull cloudy weather. The demand for plants was very light, but I attribute that very largely to the weather. It rained almost continually Friday and Saturday before Easter, so that very few people got out and most of the business was done by 'phone. I find it very hard to sell plants over the 'phone. People like to see them."

Champaign, Ill.—J. E. Yeats reports Easter trade as away ahead of last year, prices ranging about the same. Carnations retailed at 75 cents to $1.00 a dozen, common roses $1.50 to $2.00, beauties $1.00 each. There seemed to be more call for good carnations than anything else. Lawsons sold at $1.50 a dozen. Lilies were very scarce. Lots of decorating was done. Mr. Yeats had six churches to decorate. Business is still keeping up well with good prices. We want more sunshine. Can't get enough flowers.

Marion, Ind.—Gunnar Teilmann reports Easter trade about the same as last year. Everything in cut flowers was cleaned up and many carnations were shipped in. All went at good prices. Plants went well, too. Hyacinths and daffodils in pots and pans, roses, spireas, geraniums, etc. Of lilies there was a pretty good supply, all local grown, and there were a few left over. He had a good crop of Kaiserin roses in and cut nearly 2,000. The weather was unfavorable, cold and cloudy, which hampered trade or there would have been a good increase.

Auburn, N. Y.—Geo. Dobbs & Son report: "The Easter trade was fully as good as last Easter. Everything in the cut flower line was sold, there being nowhere near enough carnations to supply the demand, as every one was short on them. Roses sold well. There was a nice supply of them, too. Lilies all sold, but there was not a very good supply of them. Plants did not sell quite as good as last year, the weather being the cause of that, as it was a very dull and rainy Easter and several days preceding it. Prices were the same as other years. Taking it altogether trade was good and no one can complain."

Utica, N. Y.—C. F. Baker & Son say their Easter trade was 75 per cent better than ever before. It was most decidedly a plant Easter. This was partly due to the weather, it being rainy and wet the week preceding Easter. No novelties were offered, the bulk of the trade being in lilies, hardy roses, lilacs, azaleas, hydrangeas, spireas, deutzias and the usual assortment of bulbous stock in pans, hyacinths, tulips, valley, daffodils, violets in pots. Roses were fine and plenty. The same as to carnations, except the plenty. Violets scarce and poor. Lilies good and abundant, stock of same going mostly to churches.

Fond du Lac, Wis.—E. Haentze reports that Easter trade was probably 10 to 20 per cent larger than last year. The demand for good flowering plants is undoubtedly growing, especially for lilies, hydrangeas, lilacs, Crimson Rambler and other good roses in bloom for the most wealthy people, and hyacinths, tulips and daffodils in pots and pans for the less wealthy class. Azaleas, cinerarias and primroses were less in demand than in former years. In cut flowers the demand was mostly for first-class carnations, Easter lilies, good tulips, daffodils and violets. Roses were not so largely called for and there were but few calls for valley.

Youngstown, O.—Walker & McLean report: "Easter trade in this city has been fully up to our expectations, being about thirty per cent in advance of last year. The best selling flowers were carnations, violets, roses, lilies, tulips, narcissus, in order named. In plants—lilies, spireas, tulips, hyacinths, Ramblers, azaleas, narcissus, lilacs, in order named. This being our first Easter in Youngstown we are unable to make any comparison with former years, but feel sure that there has been a decided increase in the sale of pot plants, and also feel satisfied that the increase in plant trade is due to our having an unusual number of plants in fine condition at the proper time."

Peoria, Ill.—Easter trade was the heaviest ever experienced. Lilies were short in supply and the demand for cut flowers could not be met. Cole Bros. report fair trade. Their hydrangeas were superb and sold well. J. C. Murray reports a very heavy trade on everything. His fancy tea roses sold at sight at $2.50 a dozen. Crane and Marquis carnations were extra fine and sold at fancy prices. Lilies were all that one could ask for and sold rapidly at good prices, also spirea. Loveridge had the finest specimen Easter lilies ever seen in this market; his stock was extra fine. All the stock that could be had was bought and the florists are smiling. The weather was perfect.

Louisville, Ky.—H. Lichtefeld reports: "Easter came in raw and cold. On Saturday it rained and it hurt the trade to some extent. But take it all in all it was satisfactory in general. Prices were about the same as last year. Lots of bulbous stuff was sold. Harrisii lilies were scarce and there were not enough to go around. Callas sold well. There was a good demand for sagos and palms and ferns. Roses in pots sold well. In cut flowers the call was for carnations and roses, hyacinths and narcissus. Some very fine azaleas, hydrangeas and geraniums were to be seen in the stores. All the florists report good sales for Easter.

Easter Plant Arrangements. No. 4.

We are having too much cloudy weather here for this time of the year."

Lowell, Mass.—"Patten The Florist" reports: "A whole week of rain. Saturday night the heavens opened and kept open until after closing time on Sunday and as a result our late receipts of roses, carnations and violets, to the extent of thousands, were left on our hands, which wipes out most of the profits. Lilies ran from good to poor mushy stuff which one of our department stores sold for 15 cents per bud and flower. Also a grower who has a store sold his for the same price. Our sales of lilies increased. No call for callas. Good call for roses and carnations but there was a prohibitive price on them; single daffodils, tulips and pansies in bunches sold well. Hydrangeas and azaleas sold well. Take it altogether it was a very unsatisfactory Easter."

Colorado Springs, Colo.—Wm. Clark reports: "The Easter trade in this city started in brisk early in the week, and although it received a check in the way of a heavy snow fall on Thursday, it was resumed on Friday and continued lively until Sunday noon. The increasing popularity of flowering plants was quite evident, and while the lilies went readily, the demand for other varieties was very strong. Azaleas, hyacinths and daffodils followed lilies very closely, but hydrangeas were slow. In the cut flower line, carnations carried off first prize as usual of late, selling in large quantities. This has been practically the first season for fancy fern balls here, but they have introduced themselves in good shape and will take their place on the list for Easter gifts."

Syracuse, N. Y.—L. E. Marquisee reports: "Sales for Easter greater—some local florists report sales as double last year's—all a satisfactory increase. Prices about as former years' except on carnations, which were higher, fancy varieties, such as Marquis and Lawson, ranging from $1.50 to $2 per doz. Violets were in good demand and every florist ran short. The demand for roses was hardly up to the high water mark of former years. Tulips sold well, both as cut flowers and in pans. Daffodils went slow. Lilies were in usual demand but short crop. Nearly all potted plants sold well, especially roses in bloom. There is from year to year a noticeable increase in the demand for blooming plants. There was about the usual sale on azaleas. As a rule the best stuff in plants and cut flowers sold best. Inferior stuff and the florists who had it both got left."

Springfield, Mass.—Mark Aitkin reports: "I cannot give you any definite report at this early date as it is rather early for me to have my books straightened up. Our book trade was somewhat heavier than last year, and our cash business about ten per cent greater, although it rained here from Thursday morning until Sunday morning. The greater demand seemed to run to potted plants more this year than ever before, lily plants selling well with azaleas, hydrangeas, violets in pots, Scotch heather, primulas and crimson Ramblers. Rambler plants with us were rather poor, so did not meet with great demand. The principal demand was for azaleas, and violets in pots. There was a very strong demand also for cut violets, we alone selling 4,000 more violets this year than last year. The rain was terrific, making delivery very bad and uncertain, but we consider under the circumstances that we came out of it rather well, not meeting with much loss. There was not very much in the line of novelty for the regular run of trade, but for our fine trade we had to make up a number of large baskets of plants, which proved to be very effective. On the whole, with the terrific storm, I was more than satisfied with the Easter business for 1901, although one of our large dry goods stores had a car load of Easter lilies in pots for sale, of which I hear they had a great quantity left over."

EASTER PLANT ARRANGEMENTS.

We present in this issue engravings from photographs of six Easter plant arrangements seen last week at the establishment of Mr. E. Wienhoeber, Chicago, that we know will be of general interest.

No. 1 shows a tulip shaped birch bark basket with large bow handle which is suitably decorated with the long stem of a Crimson Rambler rose. The other roses are Clothilde Soupert, which with their fullness give the whole a summer effect. Rose pink ribbon is added to carry out the conventional idea of the basket. It was filled to sell at $20.00.

No. 2 stands in contrast to No. 3 because of its more formal appearance. The azalea is Mme. Van der Cruyssen evenly grown and full of flowers and looked well with the olive green matting which is shaped to have the appearance of Mexican pottery. Azalea ribbon was used. Arranged to sell for $15.00.

No. 3 is distinctively an Easter arrangement because the impression is that of virgin whiteness. The azalea, "Niobe," pure white, is chosen, preferably to others with a solid crown of flowers, because of its gracefulness. The fibre matting is also white and the gauze ribbon with which it is tied ends as it were in an egret to grace the beauty of the azalea. Arranged to sell at $12.00.

No. 4 is a birch bark basket trimmed with moss and pine twigs. It is filled as follows: Small areca and asparagus to give height and grace, pink and white hyacinths and Primula obconica for color. To cover soil and relieve stiffness of hyacinths lycopodium is added. The ribbon (No. 16) matches the pink hyacinths in color. Arranged to sell at $10.00.

No. 5 is filled with a number of delicately colored flowers and no color scheme is attempted. The azalea is a delicate pink, the cineraria white, hyacinths light lavender and pink and the narcissus is princeps. Durability is aimed at more or less. Arranged to sell at $10.00.

No. 6 is a white lilac dressed with white matting and finished with Nile green ribbon, which harmonizes well with the delicate green foliage. Very popular. To sell at $8.00.

CARNATION NOTES.

Easter and After.

In this section the weather has been very bad during the past few weeks, just contrary to what it should have been. Five bright days in March (when we usually have some nice weather) is not very encouraging to the grower who expects the Easter rush to help him make his books balance on the right side. But when we read of the snow storms that visited other sections lately we can only be thankful that we had only clouds to contend with.

Few growers, if any, are likely to cut more blooms than they can dispose of just before Easter, even if the weather is fine, but when it remains cloudy for two weeks and we have lots of orders booked we can hardly be blamed for turning on an extra pipe and forcing up the temperature a few degrees higher. But now that Easter is over you must be careful so as to get them into their regular stride again before any serious damage is done to the plants. You will have reduced the temperature by the time these notes reach you, but you must also be very careful in watering. They should be kept dust a little on the dry side for a few days if it clears up, and decidedly so if it remains cloudy. The warm sun may cause them to wilt some, and a light sprinkling over head and dampening the walks will help them materially. Pouring water onto the roots will not keep them from wilting, so don't do it.

A light sprinkling of lime worked into the soil and watered in will help harden the growth if it remains cloudy, but a few bright days will have the same effect if plenty of air is given. Don't stop firing too soon; wait until the weather is warm enough to keep the ventilators open an inch or two all night, without reducing the temperature below the regular mark. There will be many nights when it is rather warm for fires, but too damp without, and you should run at least one pipe and open the ventilators. With the ventilators open the houses can stand it to be several degrees warmer than when they are shut down tight.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Easter Trade.

The Easter business was fully up to last years and would have been even better had not rain interfered. The weather was execrable—that is the strongest word our editor will allow us to use—especially on Saturday, when all blooming plants exposed on the streets were ruined. The business done in blooming plants was tremendous, probably two-thirds of the whole business done would be a fair estimate. Rather better value was given this year than in the past, and the retailers bought freely in consequence.

There was no scarcity of anything and stock did not appear to be cleaned up entirely either among growers or retailers. Lilies were not in short supply as anticipated; this was probably due to a slight falling off in demand, buyers preferring other varieties of plants. Azaleas were in great demand; the larger sizes sold especially well, unfortunately there were too many. The weather was partly to blame for this and quantities of six-inch azaleas were left. Hydrangeas were in short supply, and only a limited number of really good ones were seen; these sold well, the poor ones went slowly. Spireas sold exceptionally well in the stores; some of the growers had too many. Crimson Ramblers did not go quite as well as in the past, some being left in the stores, still the sales were good. Rhododendrons, genistas, deutzias, lilacs and daisies all moved well in moderate quantities; valley in pots and pans was popular. Immense quantities of hyacinths, tulips and daffodils in pots and pans were sold. The pans were generally from 8 to 12-inch, all in one color.

Cut flowers sold well, but there were some drawbacks. There was the awful flood of daffodils that swept over us, variously attributed to the South and the violet growers' frames. Be that as it may, daffodils were everywhere at 10 and 12 cents a dozen; one commission man said even then he had 5,000 ready for Easter Monday's business. Another trouble was with carnations. The same old story. The out-of town shippers held them on Wednesday and Thursday, when they were wanted badly at $3 and $4 a 100; then sent them in on Friday and Saturday in poor shape, so poor that many of them are still in the commission houses or on the dump. It isn't business, gentlemen. Now, do be good.

To return to the market: Long Beauties were plentiful, a little over-done, perhaps, while good shorts were scarce. Prices, $2 to $5; a few fancies, $6 to $7.50; teas brought $6, $8, $10 and $12; a few selected for shipping, $15; the poorer grades did not go well; price, $3 to $5. Carnations were scarce; $4 was asked for fine stuff, $6, $8 and even $10 for fancy. Violets were plentiful; the stores got most of the doubles, the street most of the singles. Smilax and asparagus were in demand; the former at 15 to 20 cents; the latter at 50 cents a string or bunch. Cut lilies sold well at $12 and valley fairly well at $3, $4 and $5.

Notes.

Pennock Bros. were well satisfied with their Easter business. They noticed a falling off in demand for lilies and an increase in that for large azaleas. They sold quite a number at from $25 to $35.

Charles Fox did well. He made up boxes of hyacinths and lilies of the valley which were very popular. These boxes were about 6x18 inches, worth from $3 to $5 when filled.

Mrs. Edgar, Ridge and Columbia avenues, is well pleased with Easter. She did an exceptionally good business and cleaned up nicely.

Jos. Kift & Son complain of naught but the weather; they did well. Some large pans of lilies, six or eight bulbs to a pan, came in good shape from Pabst of Collingwood.

George E. Campbell had a good lot of lilies, azaleas, etc., and sold nearly all.

Albert Woltemate's store in town paid, but not like his regular place at Main and Queen streets, Germantown. This is generally true of the temporary or one-week stands. People get to know and trust their florist.

Samuel S. Pennock did a heavy business. Lilies, smilax, asparagus and carnations were in brisk demand.

Never before were so many plants seen on the street; Saturday's rain made an awful mess of them.

William Berger was well cleaned up except on some bulbous stock.

Few of the retailers slept on either Friday or Saturday nights of last week. Business this week has opened well.

The Germantown Horticultural Society's meeting held on Easter Monday was well attended. There was a good display of flowering plants by local growers. The feature of the show was Pandanus Sanderi, from Henry A. Dreer, which was much admired. Beside it was shown P. Veitchii in good form, from J. W. Young, the points of contrast being clearly brought out. P. Sanderi is a great acquisition and deserved the society's certificate of merit.

Albert Woltemate read a paper on "Lawns and Their Care," and John H. Humphreys one on "Insects." PHIL.

BUFFALO.

The Easter Trade.

I am writing this on Easter Sunday; "better the day better the deed." It is early to say how trade has been with all of us, but I can safely say that it was at least equal to last year and I expect to hear several say that it went beyond. The old-fashioned church decoration with a number of memorial pieces is about obsolete, although most churches decorate to some extent. The great and leading feature of the trade was for several years past the purchase of plants or flowers to give to friends. Children sent a plant to Grandma, and Grandma sent a flower to Baby. Girls exchanged presents of flowers and of course the only girl in Freddy's eyes received violets or roses. Even in some extreme and eccentric cases a man sent his own wife an azalea or dwarf Japanese chestnut. The exchange of gifts is enormous and long may it be the custom of fashion with all classes. It blesses those that give and those who receive and incidentally helps the poor florist to lay up a little to spend this year at the Pan-American.

Lilies were in as much demand as ever and more could have been sold. Azaleas sold well but there were enough and a few to spare. Crimson Ramblers went only fairly well. Pans of bulbous stuff went well and moderate priced plants like spiraea went very well. Only plants in flower were wanted and palms and ferns were scarcely mentioned.

In cut flowers it would be hard to say which were the favorites of the three leaders—violets, roses or carnations; the latter touched the high water mark for price for this city. Lawson and the Marquis sold for $2.50 and $3.00 per dozen and no one kicked. This of course seems very humble to Mr. Thorley or Mr. Galvin, but we think it was doing finely. Different firms have a reputation for some particular flower, but certain it is that there were never so many violets sold on any previous day. Everybody wanted them, and particularly did Alphonse send a bunch to Mamie. Locally the weather was not ideal, yet it might have been so much worse that we are truly thankful. Cloudy and slightly chilly, but away above freezing, so altogether we ought to be well pleased with the first Easter of the Century.

Various Items.

Mr. Lorenzo Dunn, the expert fruit grower of St. Catherines, Ontario, had a good look over the Pan-American last week and went away greatly impressed with the beauties of the exposition. Another well known Canadian, Mr. John Chambers, the superintendent of the Toronto Park System, had a good tramp over the territory. Such men as these can appreciate what it is going to be even if the last frills and tucks are not put on. Mr. Chambers, I believe, was surprised and delighted and will not forget to enlighten the thousands of Torontonians who will fire questions at him.

Perhaps many other lines of business have made the phenomenal growth of ours, but we hardly realize it. None have advanced on a surer basis. The love and fondness for flowers and the liking to have them with us is a sentiment of marvelous growth in this country during the last quarter of a century, and is as sure to grow with all classes as is the desire to have a comfortable home with all who have the means. Thirty years ago it was only the very well to do who thought of indulging in roses and carnations. Now all classes claim their share of flower gifts. Good taste, refinement and appropriate accessories on the part of the florist should advance with the ever increasing demand.

Here is a little story almost word for word as it happened on Saturday during the rush. A little lad of seven or eight with lustrous black eyes and tattered clothing crept up to the counter and said, "Please I want a four-cent bouquet." The clerk in his hurry paid little attention but said as a joke, "It takes six cents to buy a bouquet," thinking that would dismiss the urchin. He retreated, but turned up again in two or three hours. This time a young lady asked him what he wanted. "Please, I got six cents now for the bouquet." That would melt a harder heart than that of the good natured girl so the little fellow was given far more than the six cents' worth. "Will they keep till tomorrow, ma'am?" "Oh, yes. What are you going to do with them?" "They are for my mother. She loves flowers and I don't want her to see 'em till I give 'em to her. They're lovely and more than I thought I'd get. Thank you, ma'am." And off went a heart as full of joy as a heart can be. If all our little boys were like him what a nation this would become. W. S.

CHICAGO.

The Easter Trade.

The shipping demand for Easter was far larger than ever before and an immense amount of stock passed through the wholesale houses, though the supply of roses and carnations was short, as anticipated. The prices on roses and carnations went higher than advance quotations and the rates kept hardening until Saturday morning, when there was a decided relapse, as a lot of consignors then began pouring stock into the market, and in short order prices dropped from 25 to 100 per cent on most lines. Most of this could have been marketed at the high figures prevailing on Thursday and Friday, when the dealers were of necessity cutting orders short, and carnations that would have brought $4 readily on Friday were sold at $2.50 on Saturday. But those who got their stock in at the right time got better figures than for some years past, and on the average it was a great Easter. There were lilies enough to go around, and while many were good, the average quality was some little below that of previous years. An immense lot of violets was sold and prices were good except on a big lot that came in Saturday, when it was too late to handle to best advantage.

There was an enormous supply of bulbous flowers in the market and a large percentage of them were of poor quality. First class stock brought good figures, but the great bulk was so poor it is doubtful if they brought enough to pay for the bulbs. Tulips that drop to pieces while you wait stood no show at all. As to daffodils, Flint Kennicott says: "It rained yellow."

Roses were the scarcest right through and all orders were cut short up to Saturday. Outside buyers who got their rose orders filled were in luck. The outside calls, by the way, seemed uniformly for quality in preference to quantity. Carnations were also in very insufficient supply and those who had good carnations got banner prices with ease and comfort.

Locally the trade was probably a little larger than last year and would have shown a much greater increase had the weather been more favorable on the shopping days. The drizzling rain and raw air undoubtedly kept many from venturing out.

Some of the retailers overstocked a little on lilies, but fortunately all that failed to move for Easter were cleaned up by the large call for flowers in general on the following Monday. Probably the sale of lilies was hurt somewhat by the exaggerated advance reports in the daily papers as to the great scarcity and that prices would put them beyond the reach of all but the wealthy, etc. The florist who feeds that sort of stuff to a reporter is an enemy to himself and everyone else in the trade.

Those retailers who had facilities for handling plants to advantage report an increased demand in that line and there is a continual development in that direction each year. We photographed a number of these plants and arrangements and reproduce some of them in this issue. Others will appear next week.

In plants the Crimson Rambler rose did not go as freely as anticipated, though many were sold, and hydrangeas hung a little, too. An encouraging sign was that the more expensive plants and arrangements moved more freely than last year with those florists who cater to the swell trade, but the great bulk of the sales were of the smaller plants, and pans of bulbous flowers formed the backbone of the trade in most cases.

Trade has been very fair since Easter. Quotations on roses now range from $3.00 to $8.00 and on carnations from $3.00 to $5.00 for fancy and $1.50 to $2.50 for commons.

Various Items.

At the first meeting of the new city council last Monday evening there was a great display of flowers, the mayor and many of the aldermen being literally buried in bloom. In the collection there were some wonderful "designs," but it all helped trade for the florist and made the Monday following Easter a lively one for many in the trade.

Mr. O. P. Bassett has returned from West Baden, Ind., apparently much benefited by his outing.

Mr. Luke Collins has taken a position as foreman for Mr. G. A. Heine, Toledo, O., and after April 15 Mr. James Psenecka will be foreman for Wietor Bros. Mr. Psenecka has been in charge of a section for Wietor Bros. for four years and was last year in charge of the carnation range.

Kennicott Bros. Co. say it was the biggest Easter in their business experience.

Bassett & Washburn say last Friday's sales were the largest of any day since they have been in business.

Wietor Bros.' sales were double those of last year. They were fortunate in having a big lot of carnations just at the right time.

L. Malcher has removed to 369 Wells street.

It was a mistake to attempt to hold a meeting of the club at a date so close to Easter, when everyone in the trade is on the jump.

ST. LOUIS.

Easter Trade.

Easter trade was fully up to the expectations of all the florists; the trade here was a little larger than that of last year. There was an increase in the sale of plants and all the retailers report excellent business. A great many of the orders came in at the last moment and some of us had to work half the night in order to get the orders in shape for early delivery Sunday morning. The plant trade did not present any especially novel features. The West End florists found the strongest demand for lilies and azaleas; foliage plants also sold well this year.

The wholesalers were kept very busy with both shipping and local trade. Great quantities of lilies were disposed of, they being in great demand. In bulb stuff there was a great glut; although lots of it was sold, still lots of it is left over only to be thrown in the waste box. First-class roses sold readily while inferior grades suffered. Some pickled stock came in as usual, which, of course, was left unsold.

High-grade Beauties sold well at $5 and $6 per dozen; Brides and Maids, from $6 to $10 per 100; Meteors, same; Gates, $4 to $8; Perles were very scarce. Cut Harrisii had a great demand at $15 per 100; callas, $12.50 to $15. Carnations sold well at from $4 to $6 per 100. None could be had under $4 and some extra fancy brought $8. Violets were poor and good stock was very scarce. The demand was greater than the supply; 50 and 75 cents per 100 was asked for them. All bulbous stuff was very plentiful and generally speaking good in quality; prices were about the same as usual and the demand fair.

The majority of the florists had their windows handsomely decorated. Ellison & Tesson, Riessen Floral Co., North and C. Young & Sons Co. had a fine display of Harrisii in pots, azaleas and other blooming plants with a fine assortment of cut flowers. In the West End, Weber, Eyers, Waldbart, Newman and others, also made fine displays in their windows, consisting of fine blooming plants of all kinds and a large assortment of the choicest cut flowers.

The growers in the South End report a great plant trade and Schray, Fillmore, Beyer and Windler had all they could do to supply the demand.

Notes.

Report comes from Washington, D. C., that Prof. B. T. Galloway, of Missouri, has been assigned as chief of the proposed Bureau of Plants.

The Missouri commissioners to the Pan-American and Charleston Exposition held meetings last week considering plans for the construction of the Missouri displays at these expositions. The following committee: Messrs. E. S. Gar-

ver. John T. Beal, Rob. M. Post, C. C. Bell, F. P. Graves, appointed only March 23, have already done great work. It is greatly desired by them that the State and County Horticultural Society co-operate with them in its display of fruits. Prof. Trelease, of the Missouri Botanical Garden, will kindly contribute palms and other plants for decorations. The meeting will continue all of this week. J. J. B.

BALTIMORE.

The Easter Trade.

The clouds have hardly cleared nor the combatants rested after the battle so that an adequate estimate can be formed of the operations of the day, and the point of view of the observer, doubtless, will influence the verdict as to the Easter trade.

To an onlooker it would seem that the plant decoration of windows and rooms was hardly equal in extent to last year's. For personal adornment there was less than the usual opportunity of display, the weather being windy and raw, so that the customary parade on Charles street was not a thing to be indulged in longer than was necessary to go through the form and display new hats, gowns and wraps. The women wore mostly violets, great bunches reaching into the hundreds and almost into thousands, adorning their corsage, but some American Beauties were worn, though under trying experiences from the wintry breezes.

Saturday was ushered in by a driving rain, not so cold as penetrating and depressing, and as it came down until near noon the spirit of the dealers sank with it, as it threatened to break up the day's business by keeping people off the streets. Toward afternoon the downfall ceased, but the clouds were dull and leaden, with no inspiration of glad sunshine. Notwithstanding, people thronged the stores and market stalls and the buying continued lively until nearly midnight.

Yet we believe on the whole, there was not the complete clearing out of all kinds of stock witnessed in some years. Perhaps this is due to the larger preparations made, for, taken altogether, the consensus of opinion seems to be that never were there more flowers sold, especially in the markets. Of cheap stuff, hyacinths, tulips and narcissus, there was too great a supply. Calla lilies were in excess of requirements, although there seemed to be at first an insufficiency in sight. Carnations were good and about proportioned to the demand. Of white and Perle roses there was a shortage, but Beauties and pink roses were fairly abundant. Harrisii lilies were not to be had, and many orders went to our cousins of the City of Brotherly Love. The sale of violets was enormous, but more were still wanted and would have been readily absorbed.

The azalea was not in as high favor probably as in former years. Perhaps this statement should be modified to refer to plants of some size. The market men were provided with small well bloomed plants, which found great favor, selling at 75 cents and one dollar, which is a figure at which most buyers of a single plant in the market stop. The Crimson Rambler did not go, as in the days of its earlier introduction, and at several stores today (April 8) fine samples are on hand unsold.

The "stories" in the daily papers did a conspicuous disservice, as usual, to the trade by their exaggeration of the prices and cupidity of the florists. Many persons, who would otherwise be buyers, are frightened off from even trying prices by these exaggerated fictions.

The Florist's Exchange did, as usual, a rushing business, demonstrating anew its lack of capacity of room and accommodations to properly handle the material which comes to it. Ampler quarters would lead to more business, the better handling of stock and to the peace of mind of the buyers.

Various Items.

The market missed the large contributions usually coming in of carnations from John M. Rider, whose houses were partially, and his stock entirely, destroyed by fire some weeks ago, resulting in a loss to him of something like $2,000. A number of the gardeners banded together lately and went down to help him straighten things up somewhat. The houses will be rebuilt. Mr. R. has the sympathy and good will of the entire trade, for he is a good fellow, built on a broad gauge, and one who has achieved marked success as a grower.

Following promptly on Easter are a number of large weddings this week, which naturally will call for many flowers. There will be no scarcity, but the growers are all telling now how different things might have been had bright sunshiny days taken the place of the rain and clouds of last week.

Theodore Eckhardt, a well known gardener here, widely known for his contributions on horticultural subjects to the trade and daily press and who established some years ago a large commercial establishment near this city, has reconsidered his determination to go back to Belgium and has accepted a position at the Springfield Insane Asylum, a state institution, where he will lay off the grounds and superintend the garden work in general. The appointment is one received with much favor, as Mr. E. is a capable and active man.

New houses continue to go up. Two are noticed at Woodberry, the builder at this writing unknown. Another erected for carnations at Melvale by Mr. Baker, and a party was lately looking about Mt. Washington for a suitable site for a large florist's plant. There is consequently no probability of a dearth in the flower market. R.

Trade Conditions.

The general run of retail trade was very quiet for Easter week up to Saturday morning. This is especially true of classes of goods not usable in funeral work. But of course all were busy in anticipation of a rush the latter part of the week. Many branched out into temporarily enlarged quarters. All put in a heavy stock of potted plant life, and all salesmen of cut flowers hustled to obtain orders ahead. When at last they got their feet placed business did not open up and the lowering skies proclaimed a rain storm, which began Thursday.

Saturday morning a boom opened like the polar current rushing through the Straits of Belle Isle. It was felt first at the wholesale establishments where things jingled merrily in the morning. The witches of Macbeth seemed to have control at the Co-operative Market. It was surely "Bubble, bubble, toil and trouble." To this add equal parts Donnybrook Fair and Baltimore riot, ad lib., and move the decimal point twenty places to the right. "Sooch a pcesness!" But all kinds of goods were plentiful enough to fill all orders at low prices even though there was a demand for something all day long, because at the retail stores it soon became almost as chaotic. Toward night it began to rain again and Saturday night was one of the juciest ever known. But traffic kept right on, even the unprotected street fakirs pushing their sales among the home-going after-theater people in the downpour. There was quite a little left to attend to on Sunday, but not so much as usual, I have an idea.

Points.

Double violets were disgustingly plentiful. Roses came in a mighty close second. Prices on unengaged pinks fell from twenty-five to fifty per cent. Good lilies soon became very scarce and toward night poor ones did also, and prices advanced on them every hour of the day. Single violets were scarce. The new continuous performance theater near Galvin's store is all right. The average of the lilies at Easter was rather poor. They had to be rushed too fast the last few weeks of their growth.

Meeting of State Society.

The State Florists' Association held its April meeting at the Denison House, and by request of President William J. Berterman of the Carnation Society the consideration of and laying plans for next year's carnation convention was made the chief order of business of the evening. There was a good attendance and every member seemed anxious to help make the very best convention in the history of the society, and if the present interest is kept up it surely will be, as we have the men to do it. President Haugh was in the chair and after the matter was thoroughly discussed he appointed a nominating committee consisting of Messrs. E. G. Hill, F. Dorner, Jr., H. W. Rieman, J. S. Stuart and J. Bertermann, with instructions to appoint other committees as they deemed necessary.

This committee was afterwards made an executive committee. They appointed the following committees to arrange for the convention: Finance, H. W. Rieman, J. Evans, M. Heller, F. Dorner, Jr., Geo. Weigand. Exhibition, J. S. Stuart, F. Lemon, E. A. Nelson, J. Hartje, J. Bertermann. Entertainment, E. G. Hill, J. A. E. Haugh, Ervin Bertermann, Wm. Billingsley, H. Junge, Reception, R. McKeand, F. B. Alley, A. F. J. Baur, F. Buckreide, W. W. Coles. Every member present agreed to become a member of the Carnation Society and we hope to have a good many more throughout the state within a month or two.

President Bertermann read a communication from the German House Society offering part of their clubhouse for the meeting and exhibition, and several who have attended various conventions say that it would make an ideal meeting place. We would rather see it a few blocks farther down town, so it would be handier for the public, but there seems to be no suitable place right in the down town district. The rooms in the Denison House, where it was held several years ago, are far too small to hold us now with our multiplied membership and extensive exhibitions.

There was a table full of choice cut blooms and plants brought in by various members. Stuart & Haugh showed several varieties, including their Avondale. J. Hartje showed several seedlings that looked like trotters. Bertermann Bros. brought some nice tulips. E. G. Hill brought over some roses that attracted much attention. A vase full of a red seedling of his own raising looked to be a fine thing, and a large bright pink bloom which he said was the first bloom from a seedling plant was simply grand. If it forces well it will be a good one indeed. E. A. Nelson showed a good specimen plant of Spirea multiflora superba, also a few blooms of his pet carnation.

Those present from out of the city were E. G. Hill, Fred Lemon, J. A. Evans, from Richmond; J. S. Stuart, J. A. & J. Haugh, from Anderson; F. Dorner, Jr., from Lafayette; J. W. Bernard, from Marion. We missed our friend Kaiserin Augusta Victoria Coles, from Kokomo, as he is usually on hand when something of importance is going on.

Easter Trade.

Easter trade as far as can be judged at this date was as good as last year, but if the weather had been good the latter part of the week it would have surpassed last year at least 25 per cent. The past couple of weeks have been very dark, and Saturday and Friday preceding Easter were damp and chilly, thus preventing many people from venturing out who would have bought flowers. The supply of cut roses and carnations was just about equal to the demand, and in most cases the quality was good, considering the weather we have been having for several weeks. Plants in some lines were abundant, while in others the dark weather kept them from blooming out in time. Lilies and azaleas were abundant, also all kinds of bulbous stock, while hydrangeas and Crimson Ramblers in most cases failed to develop in time.

A. Wiegand had the best line of plants they have ever had of all kinds, and they report sales heavy and prices good. Bertermann Bros. had their store fixed up fine and the conservatory in the rear was a blaze of color. J. Rieman also had his store filled with choice stock. All the growers are satisfied with the business done, but could have sold much more if they had been able to cut more.

E. A. Nelson intends building four new houses this spring for his new carnation. John Hartje has started preparations for moving part of his houses, so as to have them all in one range.

E. Hyatt, foreman for Stuart & Haugh, at Anderson, was a visitor last week, also Mrs. Mathes and W. Beyers, from Franklin. A. B.

PITTSBURG.

Easter Trade.

Easter trade was good considering the miserable weather we had the last four days of the week; if the weather had been better it would have been a record breaker.

Stock was pretty well cleaned up except bulbous flowers, which were too plentiful. Good lilies sold well, a good many poor ones are left over. Carnations, violets and good roses were most in demand. Prices about same as last Easter. More plants are sold here every Easter. Some very pretty things in plants were seen at Breitenstein & Flemm's store a few days before Easter.

Carnations were rather scarce a week before and up to a few days before Easter, retail men and wholesalers cursing the growers for holding back stock for Easter to get better prices. Now, when these same retail, also the wholesale, men ask the grower two or three weeks ahead "How many of this or that can you give us for Easter, we need so and so many," what is the grower going to do to accommodate them unless his houses would all come in with a heavy crop just for the right time? I believe every sensible grower would be satisfied to send his flowers in every day in place of holding them if he would get a better price for the whole week instead of only for two or three days.

About 40,000 people visited the Easter show at Schenley Park Easter Sunday.

Club Meeting.

The meeting of the Florists' Club, held on Monday night last, was fairly well attended considering it was so soon after Easter and all were tired out. Of course Arthur Herrington's fine paper on "The Land of the Olive" was an attraction and was well worth listening to. Mr. Herrington showed many views illustrating his graphic account of the land of Sunny Smiles. With Walter Sheridan in the chair every club meeting transacts a vast amount of business. The committee on the club's summer outing promised a report at next meeting. The preliminary schedule for the October show was distributed among those present.

The Ways and Means and Exhibition committees will meet at the club rooms April 23. A full meeting is specially requested, as business of great importance must be acted on.

Messrs. Lager & Hurrell exhibited one of their beautiful new cattleyas. The committee awarded it honorable mention. Mr. Herrington exhibited some blooms of the very showy Gebera Jamesonii, which were awarded a certificate of merit.

Easter.

Easter was expected to be a record-breaker and immense preparations were made for it, and a record-breaker it was to be sure, but a heart-breaking one. "The worst Easter I ever had," is the answer from all except the grower of plants. The grower of cut flowers and the wholesaler needs the utmost sympathy in the density and blackness of their wrecked hopes. They must remember that it was the weather, and only the most urgent necessity could justify anyone going out to buy plant or flower in the deluge of rain that poured continuously on the accustomed purchasing days. The retailers plunged heavily in plants and left the cut flower market to shift for itself until the last; even then no flowers were bought, only those needed to fill orders. It was a case of pushing plant sales to save themselves. High prices were asked up to Saturday morning, at which time the market went to pieces. Prices—well, what can be written of them? To be sure the cream of the market, that is a few thousand roses picked from the immense quantity sent in, brought a fairly good price, but the average stock could be got at any price offered. It was a sad Easter.

New York never saw so many plants before. The quality was only fairly good, but the trimming and arranging exceeded in beauty and good taste.

THE FATE OF THE FLOWERS.

Dedicated to Alice May Dawson, Easter Greeting, 1901.

Two flowers by chance one Easter morn
Met within my lady's bower—
One a rosebud, beautiful red,
The other a fragrant fragile flower,
Both raised by hands with gentlest care
'Neath the hothouse crystal shade—
Then rudely plucked from parent stem
To please some winsome little maid.
"How sad our lot," quoth the vigorous rose
Though sweet while bloom and beauty last—
A few short hours of grand repose
Tomorrow, like all things of the past.
No sacred boon is deemed so fair
But we without one jealous theme
Can't fondly chide and nestle there.
And breathe love's vesper cherished dream.
On banquet, feast and wedding day—
That binds the faithful, loving heart
We cheer them in their happy way.
Our presence lends a peaceful start,
But when we droop our withered heads
Or show our sorrow in decay—
Soon forgotten—off we're cast
Our life is spent, we've lived our day.

IN THE LAND OF THE OLIVE.

Read by Arthur Herrington before the New York Florists' Club, April 9, 1901.

It was a rapid transportation from the rigors of winter at its worst to the joy and exhilaration of spring in its most genial aspect—from leaden skies, still air and a frost-bound earth to glorious sunshine and its responsive life in tree and flower and song of birds. At 8 p. m. two travelers in winter garb shiveringly awaited the departure of the south-bound "Rapide" from the Gare de Lyon, in Paris. At 10 a. m. next day the same two travelers sought the shaded side of the streets of Marseilles while walking out to the garden of M. Fournier, a place charmingly situated in the suburbs of the city, with commanding views of the busy seaport and the blue Mediterranean beyond. Here we got our first glimpses of that wealth and variety of vegetation that makes the Riviera a paradise to plant lovers, the garden spot of Europe. Here phœnix and cocos, bamboos, magnolias and camellias, grouped and massed, show the garden possibilities, of which more will be said anon, in the "sunny south." But even Nature in her kindliest mood as seen here fails to satisfy M. Fournier, whose first love is for orchids, so the houses containing them are visited. But without giving details mention must be made of about 10,000 seedlings in various stages of advancement, and not a few, once again a result of abundant sunshine, about to flower, though less than three years old.

Leaving Marseilles by an afternoon train was reached shortly after dark, and the road to the hotel was through an avenue of phœnix of great size and beauty. The plant, flower, fruit and vegetable industry of Hyeres is enormous, and we made an early morning start to see and learn something about it.

Traversing the before-mentioned avenue of palms, of which there are a double line on each broad sidewalk, our attention is attracted by a novel tree, planted alternately with the phœnix, a tree that at first glance looks like a pinus, but possessed of a slender, airy grace, foreign to that genus, when it suddenly dawns upon us we are confronted by an Australian tree, and it is Casuarina tenuifolia. Here it was a beautiful subject, shooting up clear and straight and conical, like a hemlock, with leafage like that of our white pine and the slender, plumy grace of the tamarisk. Some of the trees were 50 feet in height. It was a singular association, whether by accident or design I could not find out, but it would be a wise thing to take away all the phœnix, and let that avenue become one of the most unique features of the Riviera.

Passing a number of small gardens, all filled with oranges and the ground close cropped with violets, anemones, Roman hyacinths and narcissus, we reach the Jardin de Ville de Hyeres—a sort of public garden containing fine palms and other exotics, all, of course, in the open air; but its feature was its eucalyptus trees. There will be occasion for mentioning this tree later on, but to this garden must be credited the largest specimen seen during the tour—a truly gigantic tree, with a trunk girthing nearly 15 feet and an enormous branch-spread. Yet we were assured that this tree was only planted in 1871.

We next visited the

which takes its name from a magnificent pine tree standing therein. This was a purely commercial establishment, in short, a phœnix manufactory, where Phœnix canariensis is raised in thousands upon thousands for shipment to florists in northern cities. The plants are raised from seed, potted, plunged in nursery beds, grown in full sun and watered by irrigation. At the time we saw them (February) they were protected by hurdles made of the southern heath, Erica mediterranea, laid on a light frame construction, blocks of an acre being covered in this way, this being sufficient protection for such slight frosts as occur here, while admitting enough light and air to the plants throughout the period of desired protection. Doubtless many readers are familiar with these open-air-grown phœnix, which in three years make stocky plants, about two feet high, and are then shipped north, put under glass, plunged in a bed of tan or other warm material, and in a few months, having made a new set of leaves, are on the market. So sturdy and hard grown are these plants that for shipment north they are packed solid in box cars, as one would load a car of lumber; in fact, we were assured only by the possibility of shipping them in this way could profits accrue.

Besides these small grades, about two acres of ground was covered with a structure made of bamboos and about 15 feet in height, filled entirely with phœnix and growing bamboos by hundreds, in pots and tubs—a grand lot of stock.

A comparatively new culture, too, is the aspidistra, grown in the same way and with surprising results.

The nurseries of MM. Coufourier & Burlat and M. Clin were next visited—a repetition of the foregoing turning out of phœnix in prodigious quantities by similar cultural methods.

Next we visited the establishment of M. Delor, and were introduced to cultures of a totally different character.

By way of preface it should be mentioned that this fertile valley of Hyeres was once a great orange grove, but when orange culture began in Spain, Corsica and other southern latitudes it ceased to be profitable at Hyeres, and the necessity for other more remunerative cultures arose. M. Delor worked out his own salvation by growing roses, or, in strict truth, one rose. Doubtless many of us are familiar with the beautiful buds of Safrano rose, abundant in the flower markets of northern European cities from November onward, and know they are shipped up from the south. M. Delor claims to be the pioneer in this industry, and we saw abundant evidence to substantiate his claim. After several years of experiment he became a one-rose man, and that one rose Safrano. Now he has acres of it. But of especial interest was his original plantation, made 25 years ago, the bushes still vigorous and productive. The way it is profitable is an interesting instance of adapting methods to conditions and environment. Safrano or any tea rose is practically evergreen and never really dormant. In summer heat the flowers are full-blown and useless in a few hours. But the bushes are given a hard pruning early in September, and the resultant growth gives a crop of bloom at a time when the days are shorter and cooler; the buds are cut hard and shipped north packed in light wicker baskets. There are large plots of this rose of different ages, all plants on their own roots, growing in rows about two meters apart, with alternating rows of grapevines.

M. Delor is a plant lover, too, and has surrounded his house with a collection of the choicest. You approach his place through an avenue of Phœnix canariensis, which was as fine as anything we saw. They stand about 24 feet apart, have enormous clear stems about 8 feet high, immense heads of leaves, the tips just touching those of the next plant; and when we saw them all were heavy in fruit, and the effect of the great clusters of yellow fruits beneath the dense umbrageous heads of foliage was extremely beautiful. Alternated between the phœnix were gigantic agaves. The next thing to command admiration were his acacias. The mimosa of the northern flower markets (Acacia dealbata) was everywhere in evidence about Hyeres, in full blossom, but a group at M. Delor's made an impression that will never fade from memory. The trees were about 40 feet high, though only planted in 1882, with spreading heads, branched to the ground, and seen from a short distance in bright sun, beneath a deep blue cloudless sky, it was a picture of beauty to which no words can give adequate utterance nor artist's brush reproduce. Several other species of acacia were also in flower, one particularly deserving of mention being Acacia cultriformis, having small triangular leaves, like those of A. armata, but of a bright silvery color, the shoots terminated by branching panicles of feathery yellow blossoms.

Pittosporums, eriostemons and other handsome Australian shrubs were noted, and last, but far from least, we had come all this way to see and realize the beauty of an American palm, a beauty that words fail to convey and that we in the eastern states know nothing of, or we would surely have it. The palm is Brahea (Erythæa), and as growing in the open ground here surpasses in beauty any palm the writer has ever seen growing under any condition. There were several specimens, the best of them having nearly 100 leaves, in color like polished silver. The bluest of blue spruces growing here would look dull in comparison with this plant. Cannot we have it? We would have to grow it in tubs, but outside in summer it should assume as good color beneath our summer sun. Brahea (Erythæa) edulis was also well grown and abundant in fruit, which we were privileged to taste and found it pleasant, the hard seed enveloped in a sweet pulp.

The Villa Amelie, a private garden, was next visited, Australian plants being the hobby of the at-one-time owner; and here again acacias, eriostemons, metrosideras, pittosporums, haakeas, and others too numerous to mention made a garden unique of its kind, with Grevillea robusta as a crowning feature, and a revelation to anyone knowing it only as the small plants we have in pots; whereas here was a group of trees 30 feet or more in height, with stems girthing 3 to 4 feet, yet still possessed of all the feathery grace of foliage that commends it to our favor in a small state.

Much more of interest might be said of Hyeres and its products—the acres of bulbs, especially Roman hyacinths, the best grown in Europe, the acres of Globe artichokes, the vineyards and fruit gardens and fields of early vegetables.

Leaving Hyeres we were truly in the Land of the Olive,

a tree of such a distinctive type of beauty, as well as utility, so characteristic all through this maritime district, that after one has seen all that is fairest and best, native and exotic, still the olive comes back to mind as the predominating feature of the natural flora. For miles we pass through olive orchards, where the tree is made subservient to cultural methods and its beauty gives way to utility, a system of pruning prevailing which keeps it low with a flat head, so that its fruits can be gathered standing on the ground. These olive orchards abound on both sides of the railroad till we come to in and near to which are palatial homes and gardens of exceeding beauty. The first place visited was the Villa Rothschild, owned by Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, and though comparatively small in area, the garden is filled with plant treasures.

A hedge of bamboo 20 to 30 feet high makes a perfect screen from the public streets and a fine background for the massive plantings of palms, agaves, aloes, etc. Near the entrance and first to attract notice is a magnificent specimen of Cocos flexuosa var. Marie Rose, with a stem about 20 feet high, surmounted by a splendid head of leaves. The silvery Brahea Roezli was seen in fine specimens, while the massed plantings of phœnix and washingtonias were truly of tropical luxuriance.

As a substitute for grass beneath and around the palms, Ophiopogon Jaburan was used and kept as close cut as the grass. Preparations were advanced for the annual March display when the Baron occupies the villa, and we were permitted to view the stock which is brought into flower in a nursery garden close by and then transferred to the beds and borders of the villa garden when in full flower. Five thousand hybrid perpetual roses are forced for this spring display, besides rhododendrons, azaleas and bulbous stock in enormous quantity, the latter, of course, requiring no forcing; but being grown in pots in frames. M. Rans is the able gardener of this lavishly adorned place.

Close by, in the Villa des Luynes, we saw the finest Araucaria Bidwilli in the south of France, an immense tree, 50 to 60 feet high, and of great branch-spread.

We next visited the extensive domain of Lord Rendel, a place beyond the limits of the town, and extending far up the mountain side it possesses unique and varied features. In its lay-out and development the old olive groves and terraces, planted with oranges, have been preserved and combine effectively in the garden scheme. The washingtonias beside the main drive are superb and the phenix magnificent. A specimen of P. senegalensis was noted, heavily fruited and very effective, its fruits being of a rich plum-purple color. Memories of many more beautiful things seen come back, too numerous by far to give in detail here. From Cannes a short excursion was made inland to a quaint old city famous for its perfumes, and worthy of a visit, if only to see how flowers for the perfume distilleries are grown. To the right and left and below the city, which stands high on the mountain side, are miles of narrow terraces planted with jasmine, roses and other flowers, cultivated under conditions that would seem absurd, only none other are possible. Here is a beautiful country, delightful to live in, favored with a genial climate, and now richly productive, but at what cost! Those long lines of terraces rising tier above tier testify to efforts almost superhuman before the steep, rocky mountain slopes became amenable to cultivation. There was no choice in the matter, and terracing only stops when impossible. The largest and loveliest garden in this paradise of flowers is at Grasse and belongs to the Baroness Alice de Rothschild. A day was spent in it, but no attempt to express in words its varied charms and floral richness can picture it to you. About the house are fine groups and noble specimens of palms, dracænas, agaves, aloes and bamboos, and here again Brahea Roezli stands out conspicuously and strikingly attractive, a plant unique in beauty. From the villa the garden extends up the mountain to an elevation of about 1,000 feet, easily accessible throughout by a cleverly built winding road some two miles in length and of easy grade. A mountain side of olive trees has been transformed into an immense garden by a careful association of shrubs and flowers that make it replete with interest and variety, and yet at all times the charm of the olive is supreme. At a still greater elevation you rise above the olive zone into the pine belt, and here again is noted the same clever association of allied and harmonious types—nature improved by art. Here also we saw, and only at some such elevation can you see and realize, what beauty is in a country full of olive trees. The scene was one that will never fade from memory. Before us and to right and left over many square miles of country nothing but olive trees fanned by a gentle breeze, shimmering in sunshine, their glistening silvery leaves, like millions of tiny mirrors, reflecting dancing sunbeams.

Easter Report.

The fore part of the week it seemed as though we were going to have a cold Easter, the temperature going as low as 14 degrees at night. The weather indications for Saturday were rain, wind and gales. The rain ceased about 10 a. m. and the remainder of the day was fine, helping to make the business good. Delivery was easy, no plants having to be wrapped. Carnations were scarce, and on Wednesday and Thursday, the main shipping days, all orders had to go out short on some variety, white being the most in demand and shortest in supply. The quality of most of the carnations bought was but medium. Roses were good and some were extra fine quality. Some extra fine blooms on strong, stiff stems brought $2 per dozen, the regular price being $1.25 to $1.50, with Beauties from 15 to 75 cents each. Violets were plentiful and bulb stock a glut; large quantities were sold, but there was too much of it. Lilies were none too plentiful. The best grade sold out to a plant, the second grade with small flowers and short plants, sold well, but did not go as quickly as the larger blooms. As predicted, a large percentage of the lily crop missed Easter, there being plenty of lilies now.

In plants, lilies sold best and brought 15 cents per flower and bud, everything counted, and as there were many buds to few flowers the price was profitable. Cut blooms were $2 per doz. The demand for fine azalea plants was never better, while hydrangeas moved very slowly. No matter how fine the plant, no one seemed to want hydrangeas. Palms and ferns also seemed to have passed out of the list of desirable selling Easter plants. Hyacinths, tulips and daffodils in pans at 25 to 50 cents a piece sold very well indeed. Spiraea did not sell at all.

The volume of trade was about the same as last year. Everybody did a good business and all are satisfied. More good lilies could have been sold. Everything salable in roses and carnations sold out close. Carnations brought 60 to 75 cents per doz., and at a large dry goods store they were sold at 40 cents per doz. It is not known yet who furnished the flowers or their quality. The weather is now warm and sunshiny.

Crabb & Hunter rented a down town store, and did a heavy business in potted plants, no cut flowers being offered.

MILWAUKEE.

The Easter Trade.

From opinions of the trade the Easter business seemed to be more than satisfactory. There were enough cut flowers in all varieties to go around, especially lilies, in which a shortage was mostly expected the early part of the week. The most noticeable feature was the great demand for blooming plants, which shows that these are more in favor than cut flowers for this holiday. The supply of lily plants was about equal to the demand, although most of them were late this year.

Many fine window displays were made, most noticeable being Jas. Fox, whose window was filled with large, fancy baskets filled with cut flowers and plants. M. A. McKenney & Co. displayed a fine lot of Crimson Ramblers and azaleas, while Horne Bros. displayed a fine lot of lily plants, backed up with palms and asparagus. Currie Bros. were showing an immense stock of plants in all varieties. Edlefsen's conservatory in the rear of their store was completely filled with a choice collection of plants, and their large show window was an attraction to passersby.

At the market one could get any variety of plants desired and many of the old-time favorite plants displayed there seemed to be as popular as ever. Mrs. Ennis, the Grand avenue florist, is still counting the receipts of Saturday's trade, and P. Kapsalis, whose lease expired in his present location at the close of Easter trade, has reaped enough harvest to carry him through the summer dullness. C. C. P.

West Bay City, Mich.—William Reuther, of Wm. Reuther & Sons, the florists, died suddenly of heart disease April 8, aged 60 years. He was born in Stuttgart, Germany, but had been a resident of this state for 37 years. He is survived by his wife and six children. The business will be continued as before by the sons.

Augusta, Ga.—The residence of Mr. W. K. Nelson, the nurseryman, was recently destroyed by fire, the loss on the house being total. Fortunately a good share of the household effects were saved. A number of outbuildings were also burned. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have the sympathy of a host of friends in the loss they have sustained.

New Castle Ind.—Peter Weiland will start building the new plant inside of a week. He has already unloaded twenty-two carloads of material and expects eight or ten more, including the boilers. Scraping the ground is now going on.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—At the April meeting of the Dutchess County Hort. Society, Mr. I. L. Powell read an interesting paper on carnations.

SMALL PLANTS ALL SOLD.

LINCOLN, NEB.

Easter trade with us has been the largest we ever had by quite a good deal and we have been in business twenty years. In plants everything in bloom sold, the call about in this order: Lilies, large roses, azaleas, hyacinths, spireas, and then on into small stock, cinerarias, geraniums, etc. Lilies sold at 12½ to 20 cents a bloom, according to quality of plant.

In cut flowers, carnations led at 50 to 75 cents a dozen. Roses, daffs, violets, hyacinths all sold well. Trade would have been even better if the weather had been right. The first of the week was cold and cloudy and on Friday windy, blowing 50 to 60 miles an hour from sun-up till 11 p. m., but Saturday and Sunday were all that we could ask—clear and warm and no wind to hinder delivery. This helped largely in getting all orders out on time. Have not had time to see the other florists, but presume trade was equally good with them.

Prospects for spring trade are good and you will probably see us at Buffalo dressed in a smile and a tall hat while we "watch" the boys try to bowl. As for ourselves, we are getting bloated and can't bowl; it takes our spare time to clip coupons.

Yours for biz while there is biz, and bowls when there isn't.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

The florists in this city have every reason to be pleased with their Easter trade. They were all well supplied with stock of superior quality, the demand was good, prices right and weather favorable. Roses were plentiful, of fine quality and sold readily at $6 to $8.

Owing to the backward weather for some weeks back carnations were a good week late. The quality was excellent, but there was not nearly enough to go around; 65 to 75 cents per dozen was the price. The show of lilies was really good, clean and well grown, and went like hot cakes at 20 cents per bloom. Bulbous stock was there in large lots and sold well at fair prices. Wholesale prices ruled much the same as in Chicago.

The Van Bochove Bros. had their Beauties right in on time, an excellent cut of very high grade blooms which they easily disposed of at $6 to $8 per dozen. They had some heavy calls for smilax, ferns and asparagus.

Sales of pot plants were about the usual Easter average.

Visitors in town: Mr. Skidelsky, New York; Mr. Allard, Lawton, Mich., and Mr. Vogt, Coldwater.

G. Van Bochove & Bro. are building a house 150x26. RIBES.

CANTON, ILL.—A. J. Macarty, the florist, died October 21 last of apoplexy. He was of a cheerful, generous disposition and his death was mourned by a host of friends. The business is being continued by the widow and daughter, who, in addition to bearing their sorrow, have done all the work without any outside assistance. They report a very good trade.

DETROIT.

The Easter Trade.

Taken altogether, the florists have no complaint to make as to the Easter trade. The weather was very variable, being cloudy and cold on Tuesday and Wednesday, with fine clear days Thursday and Friday, only to set in with rain and cold on Saturday, which caused a good many purchasers to order by telephone instead of visiting the stores, thus buying less and making fewer cash sales, for all the telephone orders are charged.

In plants, lilies took the lead, but stock was none too plenty. All the retailers report plant sales as satisfactory, with many more sales of bulbous flowers in pans than formerly.

Various Notes.

B. Schroeter did a very fine decoration for the leading dry goods firm last week, decorating 56 columns, using wild smilax and 5,000 artificial morning glories, 48 large baskets, together with over 400 plants of lilies, azaleas, etc.

Several growers failed to get their lilies out for Easter. Rackham was, of course, in the front rank with the largest number to be disposed of after instead of before Easter. But he intends to be in it next year. He has already started the building of a new house that will stand a temperature of 90 to 120 degrees and has ordered nothing but sound bulbs, so there is still hope.

From all reports this Easter was a trifle better than last year, both in prices and the quantity of stock disposed of.

SEEDS.

Empress Earliest of All is the finest Pea for florists. Notwithstanding their dwarf habit and neat slender foliage, the plants are of vigorous growth and come into bloom always two days to two weeks in advance of the Extra Early Blanche Ferry, which has long been looked upon as the earliest of all other varieties. The flowers are as large as those of the regular strains of Blanche Ferry, and have long stout stems, making them entirely satisfactory for cutting; they are borne in close clusters of three all facing one way. The color is delicate, a bright, rich pink, while the wings are nearly pure white. Burpee's 'Earliest of All' is not only the earliest to bloom in open ground but is also the most desirable for forcing under glass for winter cut flowers. The dwarf habit of this variety renders it much more easily grown on the benches, admits of closer planting, and from seed sown during the latter part of August blooms may be cut during the holidays, while with the taller varieties no blooms could be had before February or March. Per pkt., 5 cts.; oz., 15 cts.; ¼ lb., 20 cts.; per lb., 60 cts.; 5 lbs. or more at 55 cts. per lb.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., 437-477 N. 5th St., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

TORONTO.

Easter trade here was about ten per cent in advance of any former year. All stock was pretty well cleared up. Harrisii and longiflorum found ready sale and were about equal to the demand.

Most of the growers were able to get their plants into good bloom this time and some very nice stuff was to be seen. In cut stuff roses and carnations were quite scarce, owing to the very bad weather all week which kept very cold and extremely dull with occasional showers.

The Stores.

Tidy showed a pretty window with an immense vase of Beauty roses with from three to five foot stems. Dunlop displayed some beautiful pieces of bougainvillea, rhododendrons and lilacs—the windows at both stores being very pretty indeed.

Simmons made a very pretty display, his window being of pink and white with doves suspended on pink ribbon and hanging over and among the bloom. Some very nice Bride and Maid roses were also to be seen here.

Jay & Son, of Spadina avenue, had a very large and select stock on hand and were able to clear out in splendid style.

The Growers.

The Dale estate sent in grand Bride and Maid stock, also a fine lot of lilies.

The Toronto Floral Co. had a fine lot of roses.

Manton Bros. had some good azaleas and H. P. roses in pots. These went without a murmur at good prices.

W. J. Lawrence had a nice cut of Beauties, some selects bringing the top price. His Brides and Maids were in good shape, as were also his carnations, with a splendid stock of longiflorums and spireas, all in good time.

W. J. L.

ERIE, PA.—The Schlraff Floral Co. have purchased the Titus-Berst greenhouses at 20th and Poplar Sts. It is their intention to close these houses to the public and devote the space to the growing of roses, carnations, Asparagus plumosus and smilax. These houses added to their plant at 24th and Poplar Sts. makes a total of about 60,000 square feet of glass. They have also leased a store at 22 West 9th St.

GEORGETOWN, KY.—C. H. Brown & Co. are building a range of greenhouses.

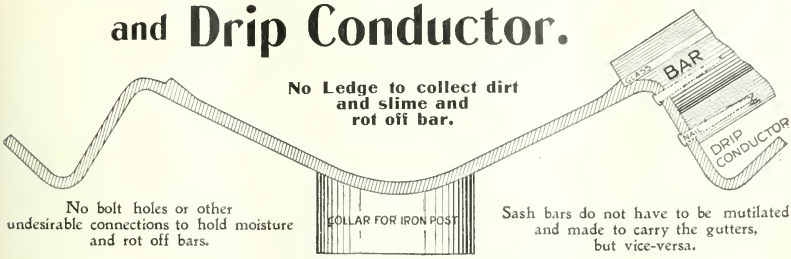
The Original Garland Valley Gutter and Drip Conductor.



The Gutter is the Foundation of the House.

It has stood a ten-year test and I can Warrant that it will last fifty years longer. Will outlast one dozen galvanized or steel gutters, as steel is the poorest material for greenhouse use. No breakage of glass by frost or ice. Only seven inches of shade in December. No drips from condensation when proper humidity is maintained within. No wires to hold bars to gutter; wires are for supporting ridge pole without using ridge pole posts. Simplest and easiest to erect, never sags or gets out of line. Made in my own foundry, of No. 1 Lake Superior cast iron. Do not make a mistake by putting in untested devices, but get into the band wagon with the successful growers who have tested the Garland Iron Gutter and Drip Conductor. THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Wedding Decorations.

Church and house decoration for weddings and other forms of festivities are about the most important matters to discuss this week with the retailer, and the many other subjects, particularly of matters pertaining to last Easter, must lay over for another time.

Very few carte blanche orders are given nowadays, but Madame and Miss call at your store and pump you dry of ideas for nothing; at best they will ask you to furnish designs and estimates, and these are the rocks on which your bark of hope is liable to get wrecked. The getting of an order these times, especially where there is much rivalry, is cause for even more anxiety than the filling of it, and many times the failure to land one is due to either stiff-necked independence or lack of diplomacy. There need be very little "bell-pulling" about wedding orders; a good reputation, artistic and otherwise, is the first care, and how to grasp the situation the next.

Whenever we are asked to furnish an estimate we send two—one cheap and the other fairly high; and we never fail to get the high one. The sending of two estimates is absolutely necessary in these days of keen competition, one to meet the "Cheap John," the florist whose only apparent mission on earth seems to be to undersell all others, and the other to enable you to give satisfaction to all concerned. Now in giving an estimate one needs to be "up" on the values, appropriateness and availability of materials, and no one is justified in pleading ignorance of these today. The time has come—it may be general soon in the large cities—when people expect sketches with their estimates. One house in New York furnishes them now with a success which justifies a more general adoption. Many, perhaps the great majority of people, don't know what they want until they see it; try to supply their wants.

If a bride-to-be is in the habit of visiting your store and you hope to get the wedding order, endeavor to have not only her favorite flower, but some specially choice or novel arrangement always on the counter; don't feel it incumbent on you to present her with flowers every time she comes in, for it is only "cheap people" who care to be under any obligations. Many accept flowers gratis from the florist because they are too well bred to hurt feelings; if you want to give flowers away, put a bunch of something choice in with their order, or better still, execute their order first class. That will create a better impression than giving them a bunch of violets and charging them two dollars for the one they order.

As to materials for wedding decorations, we know many of our readers are living in places where there is a great abundance of choice evergreen stuff and outdoor blossoms at present. Northern florists envy them their chances for artistic creations, but not their financial recompense. Here in the cold latitudes we must look to the greenhouse for the majority of our material, getting only from the South that which furnishes the background of our work. The plant and cut flower markets here are in such a condition that none are justified (except in very bad cases) in doing scrimpy work; it is a matter of selection rather than price.

It is hard to convince some that many times an artistic spray in the center of a wall produces a better effect than the entire wall being covered. Application is all in all very often. The romantically sentimental is a most essential element at the wedding decoration, and no matter how cynical or bitter your nature, let your work impart some joy; have it illustrate some of the great beauties of that which makes life worth the while. Old-time methods, designs and ideas no longer obtrude upon the progress of today, not that we see much newness; the progress lies more in the way of better work, and particularly in the using of choicer material. Thus we see a greater demand for spring blossoms, such as almond, peach, Japan quince, the deutzias, spireas, forsythia, magnolias, "red bud," and the host of beautiful flowering shrubs so easily brought into flower. These are arranged in arbors or avenues, or arches, or manufactured into trees, care being taken to have each by itself. Often the mere suggestion of the use of such blossoms may get you the order.

The manner of using it depends on the extent of the work. Sometimes a bunch in a one-colored Japanese vase makes a hit. The use of flowering plants such as azaleas, hydrangeas, lilies, genistas, etc., for weddings is so much on the increase that growers find it wise to have a supply right up to the end of June. A great mistake is made in using small, insignificant flowers in the church; whatever you do use big showy blooms and concentrate them. A decoration loses considerable of its value if only seen a few feet from the altar, and the majority of the people don't see them and the bridal party are too much occupied to examine your work. For this reason, too, it is a mistake to concentrate all one's endeavor on the altar; the body and entrance to the church deserve more consideration than is usually given.

Then, where it is possible, and it is so in nearly every case, the center aisle should be reserved for the bridal party; in this way it can be made a grand feature. An azalea can be fastened on the end of each pew; have them all one color—any variety will do; trim the rest of the ends of the pews with greens and a garland and pendant of flowers of a contrasting color. No ribbons should be used. The idea to be brought out is to have the bridal party walk down an avenue of flowers. Use a white or light green crash carpet on the floor and scatter a few short pink or red roses on it. Have a floral swinging gate at the entrance and don't arrange the flowers higher than one foot above the woodwork. Be careful not to have stems, wire, thorns or such things protrude in a way dangerous to dresses. Floral arches should never appear cheaply done; if the price is small use plenty of greens and cluster your flowers where they will show most.

The altar or communion rail is another important point, and the flowers put there should be high enough to be seen from all over the church. Rig up a temporary shelf, cover it with a white cloth to hang about a foot in front, over this a delicate tracery of vines and roses, suggesting the natural, and then a hedge-like row of pink or white azaleas behind. The old system of hilly groups of flowering plants is passe; the hedge-row shows off much better. Hide the pots and use some sort of cloth in front that will bring out the color to better advantage.

We will continue this subject with illustrations next week. IVERA.

EASTER PLANT ARRANGEMENTS.

In this week's issue we present five engravings from photographs of Easter plant arrangements seen this Easter at the establishment of Mr. C. A. Samuelson, Chicago.

No. 1 is a jardiniere 18 by 8 inches, filled with Clothilde Soupert and American Beauty roses, nine plants in all. Color of ribbon, a pleasing shade of green. The selling price of this arrangement was $8.00.

No. 2 is a birch bark basket, 21 by 10 inches, handle 31 inches high. It is filled with nine plants of Clothilde Soupert rose, a little asparagus added, and dressed with pink ribbon to match the color of the roses. It was arranged to sell at $10.00.

No. 3 is a birch bark jardiniere, 16 by 6 by 6 inches, filled with Primula obconica and cyclamens, the sash being a pale lavender to match the primula flowers. It contains eighteen plants and was arranged to sell at $7.00.

No. 4 is a green braid jardiniere, 21 by 8 by 5 inches, filled with lilies and Primula obconica. The sash is open work lavender ribbon. It was arranged to sell at $12.00.

No. 5 is a green braid basket, 13 by 12 inches, with a sash of green ribbon, and is filled with five lily plants, a few cut stems being added to give fullness. It was arranged to sell at $10.00.

BEAUTY CUTTINGS.

Can you tell me why my Beauty cuttings turn yellow after they have been in the sand about three weeks and are calloused? My stock is in splendid shape and the foliage is the deepest green in color when the cuttings are put in the sand. INQUIRER.

It is as much a puzzle to me as it seems to be to Inquirer. We experience the same trouble just now, though we feel sure we treat our cuttings the same as before. We have had some very warm and windy days that we thought might have had some effect on the cuttings.

Yet I am inclined to think the principal cause may be in the wood itself. Cuttings from rank growing plants seem more inclined to act in this way than those from sturdy plants that have had the full sun. Cuttings made in fall and January generally do well. They naturally have the best chance, as far as temperature is concerned, but aside from this I believe the condition of the wood has a great deal to do with it.

ROSE NOTES.

The Young Plants.

The clearing out of the Easter plants will have given most growers sufficient space to work up their young rose stock. This important matter should always receive our closest attention, but on most places every bit of space is so crowded before Easter that it seems almost impossible to give their young rose plants sufficient room. Do not defer giving the young plants every possible chance to make a healthy and sturdy growth. June, our main planting season, will soon be here, and it pays to get the plants benched early. Two months' growth during the summer are worth twice as much as in the fall.

Summer Bloomers.

Kaiserin, La France and other good summer bloomers which are planted in solid beds will from now on outclass Brides and Maids on benches. It would be well to consider whether it would not be wise to throw out some of the houses or benches and plant in young stock. This would give the young plants a good start and put us in a position to commence cutting some from the young stock by the time the last house is thrown out.

Early Planting.

We are now planting one house of each of the leading varieties, though we feel sure the old roses would still pay well till after Decoration Day, but we know that the early fall trade will much more than offset the present loss. High grade flowers will always bring a good price, but you cannot have good long-stemmed flowers early in the season if planting is deferred too long.

CARNATION TROUBLES.

The varieties of carnations that I have are Flora Hill, White Cloud, Jubilee, Scott and Daybreak. Until February the Flora Hill bloomed freely and with nice blossoms, but since that time they grow to grass (I think you call it). They look very thrifty, but no flowers to speak of. I send you samples of it, also of the Scott. You notice they are sprouting all along the stalk and send out too many buds. The Scott blooms quite freely right along, but as you will also notice the stalk is full of young sprouts. The Jubilee and Daybreak seem to be all right, only at times the blossoms are smaller.

They were planted in rich black soil, with one-third of well-rotted manure. During winter they received two mulches of well-rotted manure, the first cow and the second cow and hog mixed, and two coats of slaked lime, as directed in your journal. I kept the ground loose, and kept the temperature until February to an average of 55 degrees at night, since then from 48 to 50. I have used liquid manure only once, last week. They grow as follows: White Cloud, 2-10 high; Flora Hill, no blossoms; Jubilee, 2-5; Scott, 2-10; Daybreak, 2-1. L. A. G.

The sample shoots of carnations came in good order, and they show that there is nothing seriously wrong with the health of Mr. G.'s carnations. The small blooms are due to negligence in disbudding and the F. Hills failing to bloom is likely caused by the changing of the temperature.

You should at all times remove all the buds except one bud to each flowering stem, and usually the large center bud is the best one to have, but if it is injured in some way, one of the side buds will do almost as well if it is taken when quite small. Remove the buds and shoots from as much of the stem as you expect to cut with the bloom and that should be low enough to keep the plant compact. It will help to keep the succeeding growth upright, and the shoots from the main body of the plant will give better satisfaction than those starting half way up the stem.

Mr. G. made a mistake when he reduced the temperature to 50 in February, after having kept it up to 55 degrees up to that time. White Cloud, Jubilee and Daybreak were not affected very much by the change, because they enjoy a cool temperature, about 50 degrees, but

Easter Plant Arrangements. No. 3.

Flora Hill does best in 55 degrees, and changing from that to 48 degrees would naturally retard the growth a good deal when they were accustomed to the higher temperature.

If the shoot sent is a fair sample the Flora Hills are just starting to throw up flowering shoots, and will be in crop about the latter part of May. Raising the temperature to 55 degrees will hasten the growth somewhat, and at the same time there is no danger of injuring the other varieties, now that we have a good deal of bright, sunny weather. The growth is very fair, judging from Mr. G.'s figures.

In preparing the soil for next season's planting I would advise using less manure; one-fifth of manure is sufficient. We prefer composting our soil the fall before we want to use it, but if it is composted at once there is yet time for it to get into good shape by next fall. Use a good heavy loam which has a heavy sod growing on it; soil that will grow good sod will grow good carnations as a rule. If it is to lay piled up six months or more you can have the sod cut only a few inches deep, but if it is to lay only three or four months you better take a good deal of soil with it to help rot the sod. If the soil is rather light mix in cow manure, but if it is heavy, well-rotted stable manure will do very well. Carnations do not like a rough, lumpy soil, so it should be well-rotted and pulverized before using. But do not get over anxious and begin before the ground is in good condition. Soil that is handled in a wet state will never grow as good stock as that which is handled at the proper time. It will always remain stiff, and when it dries out it will bake hard like stones. A. F. J. Baur.

BUFFALO HOTELS.

The Buffalo Florists' Club have undertaken to arrange for the accommodation of all visitors who expect to attend the convention of the S. A. F. in Buffalo.

While it is true that hotel rates will be higher than usual, there are any number of apartment houses that have been fitted out for the accommodation of Pan-American visitors; also private houses in the residence portion of the city, where rooms can be had for $1 and up for each person, and in many breakfast will be served if desired, while other places will give all meals, the latter not so plentiful.

The hotel committee have a list of houses and hotels with the rates, and any person or persons wishing to engage rooms can have same secured in advance by addressing the chairman of the committee, W. A. Adams, 479 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y., stating whether they want accommodations at hotel, apartment or private house, with or without breakfast, and the number of persons desiring accommodations together. It will be necessary to inform the committee early, as they have the refusal of several apartments for the week, where from one hundred to one hundred and fifty can be accommodated in one place.

It will be unnecessary to communicate with W. J. Stewart, secretary of the S. A. F., as the executive committee look to the Buffalo Club to accommodate the visitors, which the hotel committee are willing to do, providing they are notified in time.

Street car facilities are excellent, the restaurants plentiful and rates reasonable. No one will be overcharged at any place, and with the above desirable apartments and private houses every one will be taken care of if they notify the committee in time.

A NATIONAL FLORISTS' AND GARDENERS' UNION.

Editor Florists' Review: Having read the several letters appearing in your paper on the above subject, I think the florists and gardeners of this great country should feel ashamed of not having formed such an association before.

I would include both the commercial and private men, foremen, head gardeners, florists, clerks in stores and all assistants.

Let us now take the iron while it is hot. I call upon those who are not afraid to come forward at once in every city and town, and let us know who you are and where to find you.

If every first-class florist and gardener, etc., will do this at once, and call a local meeting amongst themselves, appoint a representative and delve into his pocket at the rate of 25 cents each (and throw jealousy to the winds), he can be represented in Buffalo next August and such a union formed, and he can then be on equal grounds with every other professional man in this country. At present we are on a lower standard than many a common laborer in this respect.

I would suggest that where florists and gardeners, etc., are not numerous enough in one city or town that these cities and towns work together and send one good delegate to represent them.

For instance, in my own locality I would suggest the cities and towns of Lowell, Lawrence, Haverhill, Andover, Nashua and Manchester send one delegate between them.

Now get together, men, and talk this matter over, as we are each day, as at present, losing ground, lowering our profession, our wages and also the price of our productions.

We must have a national society, and the first year of this new century is the time to form it, and the city of Buffalo as good a central meeting place as we can find, besides having the advantage and help there which we shall surely get from the Society of American Florists.

Up and at it!

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Bedding Plants.

There are few weeks in the year busier than those before us just now, for everything used in the flower garden wants its last shift so as to be ready for bedding out, which varies in different latitudes. With us plants that are hurt by a slight frost are not safe outside before the 25th of May. We often risk geraniums by the 15th and many seasons have done well by so doing, and again have seen them cut down black on the 20th. Coleus, alternanthera and cannas we never put out till the last few days of May. But this is no guide to those who live in a more temperate clime.

At the risk of repeating what I have perhaps written of lately I propose to tell you now just what I would consider a good shape in which to have your stock for spring sales. It would be next to impossible to mention everything you grow and at the same time I don't expect that many of my readers grow everything I have spoken of, but unfortunately there is yet a lot of us whose peculiar line of business demands us to grow or supply most everything for the flower garden from a carnation to a caster bean. Never has the need of the application in our business of the prineiple of division of labor more impressed itself on me than the last few days. And it is coming, but it has not yet reached us all, and so we plod along.

I would like to find just now all the hardy annuals such as asters, stock and phlox transplanted an inch or so apart in flats and put on a dry bottom in a sunny position in a cold-frame with the means of covering the sash on cold nights. The cannas in 4-in. pots in a bright, warm house where on warm days they can have plenty of ventilation. The caladiums in 5-in. pots in the same situation. Alternanthera in 2-in. pots or flats in a mild hot-bed, where they will grow like the proverbial weed and can be hardened off later by the removal of the sash.

The zonal geraniums that were propagated last September and October are in 4-in. pots and on benches in the lightest houses; no shade over them, but if you could possibly put two or three inches of plunging material between the pots it will save you labor in watering and keep the plants a better color. With us our zonals are fast putting up their flower trusses and we can use the flowers, and the plants are all the better without the flowers till near bedding time. The zonals that you propagated in February should now be in 3 or 3½-in. pots and will make good bedding plants by the end of May. You should have a good stock of Salvia splendens of the dwarf early flowering variety. The salvia is a plant that you do not want to have too early and pinched for pot room or they are very liable to get covered with red spider. So small plants now shifted into 3 and 4-inch will make the right size plants by selling time. Every year there is more demand for these common but showy plants.

We use a large lot of vineas for vases. Propagated in the fall they should now be growing in 3-in. pots and by the end of next month they will be the right size. You should also have a large lot of trailing abutilon. Its variegated foliage makes it very desirable for window boxes. For both these plants and many others we have to find a place along the edges of benches so they can grow out. If stood together on a bench they soon spoil.

You should have a big lot of sweet alyssum just shifted into 3-in. pots and plunged in a mild hot-bed. We have never had enough of them. There should be a large stock of lemon verbenas. Plants about now shifted into 3-in. and put into the hot-bed will make splendid bushy little plants by bedding time. Ageratum is such a rank growing plant that we keep them in the benches. This is another plant you don't want to have too early. Plants even propagated now and later given a 3-in. pot will make splendid bedding plants. Tuberous begonias I would like to have now in 3 and 4-in. pots, but only just started. They also will do better in a mild hot-bed than in a greenhouse and, like many other things, can be hardened off.

If you carried over any carnations from last fall in a cold-frame for bedding out for summer bloom, or propagated any very early for the same purpose, it is time they were planted out. Your customers foolishly wait till coleus time and then ask for carnations. Sell them and get them planted out as quickly as possible. Centaurea gymnocarpa is still used for bedding and more with us as a veranda box plant. We prefer to grow them in the benches in a light house as they get a better color and hardier growth than when put into a hot-bed. There is always a good demand for Cobæa scandens. Ours are just shifted from a 2-in. to a 4-in. pot and a slender stake of two feet high put to them. Keep them in a cool, light house and they will be amply large enough.

It is difficult to say how we would like to have coleus because we want them in all stages. Just now we are shifting a thousand or two from 2½-in. to a 4-in. and giving them their last pinch. In a warm, bright house where the heat is kept up these will make large plants, with us so useful for vases and veranda boxes. There is no better place than the hot-bed for your main crop of Verschaffeltii and Golden Bedder and these two comprise 90 per cent of all the coleus you want. We are now shifting a big lot of these bedding size from 2 to 3-in. and they will make good, sturdy plants by bedding time.

Though a plant entirely out of the bedding class I would just say that our cyclamen are now in 3-in. pots on a shelf. I know many of you have a strong objection to a shelf, but when crowded they come in very good. Be very careful that they never suffer from extreme dryness, for it does them great harm.

I forgot to mention earlier a very important plant; that is, the ivy geranium. We have lately shifted all ours from a 3 to a 4-inch. We use these very largely. There is no other place for them but a shelf, because they must have room to grow in width and not in height. I have often seen these plants allowed to bloom long before selling time. They are the most profuse bloomers early in the season. Keep the flowers pinched off until the middle of May or it will stunt their growth. The common white pyrethrum, often called Feverfew, is, as you all know about hardy. They should be in a cold-frame. Our fuchsias are now in 4 and 5-in. pots, growing vigorously. Don't neglect tying them (that is, the varieties that need it), and here is a plant that must have some shade.

Heliotrope is another plant that we have in successive batches and often we have them too early and they get rusty and shabby before market time. Thrifty plants in 2-inch pots, if pinched and shifted now, will make the best for bedding. Lobelia we have just shifted from a 2 to a 3-inch. They always go on the shelf and we never have too many. Mignonette sown in February should now go into a hot-bed. Three plants in a 3-inch pot make nice plants. Every one should raise these favorites from seed, but they do not, and it is surprising how many are asked for at bedding time.

Nasturtiums of the climbing varieties should be now in 2½ or 3-inch pots, and, as I have frequently had occasion to say, they do not want a rich soil. These also we put on the shelf. If very small plants now, they will be plenty large enough by the time you are filling vases.

The great majority of people do not plant out pansies until late in May. This is a big mistake. Those we have wintered under glass in a cold-frame are now coming into flower and now is the time we sell them. They do better and you have a month bloom before it is time to put in the permanent summer plants. Get rid of them as soon as possible, for now thy command a better price.

I have had very little to say about pelargoniums for a long time for the reason that I am about disgusted with the way they sell. The zonal geranium is so much more satisfactory that they have entirely displaced the show pelargonium. It will soon be their season of blooming. I can only say this about them: never let the fire out in the house they are in. One damp night and the petals will drop, lodge on the leaves and rot them. Continual mild fumigation and plenty of warm fresh air is the secret of growing pelargoniums.

The petunia is a very important plant with us for various purposes. They grow very fast. Our plants have just been potted singly from the flats into 2½-inch pots and stood in the lightest and coolest house we have. In a hot-bed they grow altogether too strong. I see at last that the little plant that nobody seemed to know much about, Pilogyne suavis, is now being advertised as the Minnesota vine. It is one of the best of all summer climbers. It will make a dense veil, even surpassing the cobea, and much prettier. I hope you have some. It is a difficult plant to winter, but grows at a tremendous rate toward spring. Cuttings put in now root so quickly that there is plenty of time for them to make as large plants as is desirable.

We are asked every year for 100 or so of ricinus for large tropical beds. Ours have just been shifted into 4-inch pots. We have a number of tuberoses started and they will be shortly shifted into 4-inch pots, and they also go into a hotbed, where they make much quicker growth than in a greenhouse. We don't grow them for flowering, but our customers want them for their gardens.

Verbenas are still grown, but not to such an extent as they were years ago. We have been raising from seed for a number of years. Seed sown the last of January have made nice plants. We have stopped them once and now they are in a hot-bed, but the danger of this method is that they root through into the soil and you must be careful in a week or two to lift them up an inch or so, enough to break off the root. If you do not, they will make such roots in the plunging material that they will make all growth and no flower. Now, what I have written above is nearly all for summer bedding plants, and that, I think, is enough for one week. WILLIAM SCOTT.

NEW YORK.

The Spring Season.

The season in the vicinity of New York is nearly two weeks behind. Vegetation seems moving very slowly; not that it has been an over severe or long winter but cold wet rains seem to have retarded everything. However, the seedsmen, nurserymen and general plantsmen, are extremely busy and the prospects seem very bright for an extraordinarily prosperous spring. There is a great demand for novelties of superior merit and that is one of the best indicators of a good business season. Geraniums seem to be regaining lost ground and even promise to overthrow the canna somewhat in popularity as a bedding plant; this is perhaps because there has been too many trasby cannas put on the market of late years and the people get tired of the lanky leaved flowerless plants.

The plant market at Canal and West Sts. opened with a bang and the old familiar peddlers' wagons can be seen traversing the streets with their loads of pansies and soft wooded flowering plants. By the way, pansies are in greater demand than ever; window boxes and vases filled with them are appearing everywhere.

The Market.

The only melancholy note to be heard just now comes from the ice boxes of the wholesale florists here; an undesirable state of affairs exists. When roses, good ones, too, can be bought at from $1.00 to $2.00 per 100 up at this time of the year it is useless to use up type in further description; whatever is done let it be in sympathy.

The Easter plant trade in New York was enormous. Lilies on the average were poor; the most was made by those who made up their stock. The retailers had considerable stock left on hand; much of it, however, came in handy for complimentary and other sorts of jobs.

Various Items.

At the meeting of the horticultural section of the American Institute last Wednesday there were but very few flowers on exhibition. Much good work was accomplished by those in attendance. H. W. Gibbons read a most instructive paper on greenhouse building.

The Horticultural Society of New York met the same afternoon and arranged for an exhibition of cut flowers and plants to be held in conjunction with the New York Botanical Society at the museum in Bronx Park, May 8 and 9. Good prizes are offered and all the local societies are to be invited. It is expected that this will be a great field day, it being the first exhibition to be held at the Botanical Gardens. Particulars can be had from L. Barron, 136 Liberty St.

Dutch nursery stock occupies the principal portion of the auction tables these days and very good prices are the rule.

There will be numerous changes among the retailers this year. James H. Carroll, with Thorley ever since he came on Broadway, is now manager for Fleischmann, and Jim arranged some of the best things seen this Easter. Alex. Warendorff gives up his store at Thirtieth street and Broadway May 1, the business to be consolidated with that of his brother, Joseph Fleischmann, at the Hoffman House. Prower Bros. move across the street. We hear Dards and Siebrecht & Son intend moving to more prominent locations on Fifth avenue.

There promises to be a revolution in the mode of selling cut flowers in this city. The large growers will, it is said, shortly organize and open a market to retail their own stock. J. I. D.

WASHINGTON.

Easter Trade.

For a whole week before Easter the sun was hidden behind the clouds, and Saturday morning it began to rain. Of course prices came down with the rain, but about noon the sun shone beautifully and brought the buyers out in throngs. Prices for all stock were much more reasonable than in former years, but the supply was much greater and hence better receipts. In spite of the weather, the business in general was at least 25 per cent greater than last year.

Azaleas in smaller sizes sold well. Quite a few Ramblers could be found on the shelf. The demand for Ramblers for an Easter plant is growing less. Lilies sold on sight; still there were plenty to go around, but none left. Pans of tulips and hyacinths, such as 50 cent to $1 sizes, sold well. Spireas sold fairly well, but some of the boys had entirely too many. Rhododendrons, genistas and deutzias held a back seat, although some very fine plants were to be seen. Hydrangeas sold well, but the greater demand was for $1 to $1.50 sizes. Violets in 6-inch pans sold readily for 50 to 75 cents. Hyacinths in pans were cleaned up early in the day. The supply was far short for this popular Easter plant. Daffodils came in by the tens of thousands from the south, in competition with ours, which was a blow, and sold for $5 to $6 per 1,000. Consequently they were sold and ours held over for the dump, as well as violets, which were entirely too plentiful, bringing $2 to $3 per 1,000, but home-grown violets were away short and $5 to $7 per 1,000. In the way of general cut flowers there was no scarcity.

Gude Bros. supplied the market with fancy Beauties and cleaned out at $6 to $9 per dozen. There was a general scarcity of short Beauties. Teas of all kinds were picked up very readily at 12½ to 15 cents.

The American Rose Company held the town on lilies. Their supply was something enormous and sold at $2 per doz. Their delivery wagons were going all night and nearly all day Sunday. The finest Easter they ever had. Their new rose, Ivory, went like hot cakes.

J. R. Freeman hit it right with everything but lilies. Plants of all kinds, and fine ones at that, all went and at good prices.

Z. D. Blackistone's was a massive bower of plants, and well arranged, too, but the next day it looked as if a cyclone had passed through his store. "Did fine," he says.

George Shaefer had a handsome effect in made-up plants and did a much greater business than he expected.

O. A. C. Oehmler did a fine business. Two days after Easter fire broke out in his place of business and completely burned him out. He has been in business only a short time and has the sympathy of the craft. Fortunately he was insured for enough to completely cover his loss.

Elmer Mayberry, of F. W. Bolgiano's, says: "We had to close up early Sunday—completely sold out. Did the best we ever did."

W. E. Lacy, of the Grant Flower Store did finely; sold out everything.

The display of J. H. Small & Sons was something rich in the way of fancy made-up plants. From the general appearance the next day they did a great business.

J. L. Loose says: "We were prepared for the rush and got it. Yes, sir; we had plenty of everything and everything went."

Business since Easter has been fairly good. Lilies are a great glut. Too many; they will not sell; can't give them away. Daffodils are the same way.

BUFFALO.

The past week we have had most charming weather and hyacinth and tulip beds would take a shower.

From fuller reports of Easter it appears that everyone did a larger business than last. That was to be expected here because we have many more people in the city than there was a year ago and everybody is feeling better off. How much the increase was I can't say, but I should think at least 20 per cent. I notice quite a few bougainvilleas left over—nice flowered plants. People are not quite educated up to it yet. We found that out two or three years ago. And there were also all the Ramblers in town that were necessary.

Take it all together stuff was well cleaned up. There was not such a great demand for roses. Violets were the favorites. I was told that S. A. Anderson sold 20,000, and supposing that Mr. S. took a long breath when he made the statement, and that 10 per cent was added by the one who told it to me, it was yet a large quantity.

Henry A. Dreer has Mr. Parsons on the ground fixing up his exhibit in the conservatory at the Pan-American, and Mr. Julius Heinrich is looking after the interests of Peter Henderson & Co., and converting an expanse of clay into a small paradise.

Mr. Benj. Slug Shot Hammond was here and others, but my time is up.

Pan-American Progress.

April in Buffalo, although it cannot be called a cold month, is very uncertain, and unfortunately this April has been so far a typical one and a little more so. A bright dry April would be a great blessing to the progress of work on the grounds, and that, of course, is of more consequence than all the agricultural and horticultural industries of this broad land—or we think so. The shrubs and herbaceous plants, with few exceptions, have come through the winter in good shape and the grass seeded last year is perfect and slowly assuming the welcome tints which gladden the eye. The thousands of hyacinths, tulips and narcissus are showing well above the ground, and these in the exhibit department are bound to make the music garden a brilliant expanse of color during the month of May. The long borders on each side of the Grand Basin, containing a quarter of a million bulbs, are also showing up finely.

I will pause here to say that when every detail is finished and these beds are gay with summer flowers and fountains with the Electric Tower filling the view to the north with the exquisitely tinted Music, Ethnology, Liberal Arts and Machinery Buildings to your right and left, the grand group of government buildings rounding off the eastern view and the horticultural group the western, it will be a scene, a dream, never before equaled. The aquatic basins in the Court of Fountains in front of the Machinery, and the Court of Cypress in front of the Liberal Arts Building, are about complete. The one destined for the Victoria will be carefully and thoroughly heated. The exotic nymphaeas also for this basin are being grown in the conservatories, and are already splendid plants and growing at a prodigious rate. Many exhibits of conifers and shrubs will be here the moment the ground is sufficiently dry.

The landscape department is still propagating with all possible speed and many hundreds of sash are now covering hot beds that contain hundreds of thousands of bedding plants to be used in the courts, at the base of many of the buildings, in front of the Pergolas and in every available spot where color of flower and foliage can further embellish. As I have often had occasion to mention, this is no "White City, and the charm and delight of the coloring of the buildings is beyond my descriptive powers. Amherst street, the only paved street that crossed the acquired ground, would be no longer recognized by the oldest inhabitant. On each side of it magnificent palaces; crossed by canals; in long stretches, planked and paved ten feet above its old level; bordered by tall Lombardy poplars, and where the old street is still left at its original grade, covered with a foot of soil which will be a tropical garden profusely dotted with splendid statuary.

Within a few days the fence dividing the acquired ground from Delaware Park has been removed. Buffalo people knew the effect of this, but the stranger whose attention was not drawn to it would have no idea of the enhancement to the whole Exposition. Here are 150 acres of a true park whose landscape features are unsurpassed. Although electric fountains, electric launches and innumerable lights throughout the grounds will make it a fairy scene on summer evenings, great and beautiful as is the whole design of the Pan-American, the transition from the artificial to the natural as you enter the park is delightful and a feature that no previous exposition has had the good fortune to possess.

The schedule of the classes for the series of flower shows which will be held throughout the summer is being issued in very tasty pamphlet form, and all those who are interested in these exhibitions who do not receive a copy will be gladly furnished the same by forwarding their request to me at the Horticulture Building, Pan-American Exposition grounds.

PITTSBURG.

Club Meeting.

On Thursday, the 11th inst., the Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club held its regular monthly meeting at the rooms of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., 504 Liberty street. There was a good attendance and a spirited meeting. There are seventy eight members in good standing.

Hyacinths.

There was an exhibition of hyacinths from Schenley Park and of new carnations from Mr. C. W. Ward, of Queens, L. I. The hyacinths were representatives of a large collection donated by Henry A. Dreer, of Philadelphia, to the park last fall. The best yellow was Ida. La Grandesse was voted the finest white, and L'Innocence and Queen Victoria found much favor. Alba Superbissima while a good white was disapproved because of its tendency to green tips. Baroness Van Thuyll, a long time standby white, was repudiated because of its tendency to "spit" its flower spikes, and Madame Vander Hoop isn't innocent in this line. King of the Blues was the deepest and finest of its color, and it makes big spikes. Charles Dickens came next and is easy to grow. Grand Lilas and Queen of the Blues gave most pleasure among the paler blues.

General Pelisseur was the finest of the deep reds, but it doesn't hold its color long. Lord McCauley and Gertrude were fine among the deep pinks, and Charles Dickens the biggest and heaviest among the pinks; Gigantea, a full flower and lovely pink, was much esteemed, and because of their pretty pink shades some leaned heavily to Fabiola and Norma, but these were deficient in size. The best of the doubles were Grootvoorst, pink, and La Tour d'Auvergne, white, but doubles were not in favor.

Evidently the Pittsburg florists are souring on hyacinths. They claim there isn't enough money in them. They get only $1 to $1.25 a dozen for nice plants in four-inch pots in bloom, and after paying for bulbs, pots, etc., there is so little profit in the venture that several expressed themselves emphatically against growing them again. They make more money from other flowers.

Carnations.

Mr. Ward's carnations were beauties and consisted of Governor Roosevelt and Harry Fenn, crimsons, and Viola Allen, Golden Beauty and others of fancy types. Every florist present was a good Republican for once and wore Teddy in the lapel of his coat, even John Bader, a pronounced Democrat, declared the carnation was all right anyway and asked for another bloom. Mr. Reineman believes it is the best crimson in the market. Gus Ludwig said the color is used very little in Pittsburg because there is never enough of it at one time in the market for a full decoration. Mr. Blind spoke well of it, as he saw it grown in the east. But Harry Fenn captured the meeting. It isn't nearly so dark as Roosevelt and it is suffused with a bright scarlet glow that gives it good life, and more than that, it is exceedingly fragrant. It has also a good, stiff, long stem and a well knit, finely formed flower. The fancy or variegated carnations were very beautiful, but the Pittsburg florists don't enthuse over them because there isn't much market demand for them.

Notes.

All expressed satisfaction with their Easter trade. Lilies in pots were unequal to the demand. Mme. Van der Cruyssen azaleas sold like hot cakes. Simon Mardner was next in favor; then Vervaneana as a variegated flower and Niobe as a white. But there were some whites left. Mme. Van der Langenhoff came in for some abuse because it drops its buds and leaves when being imported. Crimson Rambler roses received considerable commendation, but the home-grown stock flowered better than what was bought in the east and brought bither for forcing.

Henry H. Negley, Alexander Negley and Dr. Shaffer, gentlemen who have fine orchid collections in Pittsburg, were present, and Mr. H. H. Negley, just returned from an extended trip through Florida, gave an interesting talk about the gardens in the Flowery state and his interest and pleasures in the Everglades, mangrove swamps and along the river banks in search of wild orchids. He was loud in praise of the "palm" orchid (Cyrtomium punctatum) and its big panicled spikes of brown and yellow flowers. He exhibited this at the meeting. But be cautioned the members against going to Florida to start in the florist business. His advice was, "stay here and make your money and go to Florida to spend it." P. A.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The usual after Easter conditions prevail, especially as regards roses, lilies and bulbous flowers. Of roses there is practically a glut and prices are difficult to quote. On really first class shipping grade the price is about $5.00 to $6.00 per 100, but the great bulk of good stock is sold at from $2.00 to $4.00 and the poor stuff runs down to $5.00 per 1,000. There is a big supply of late lilies and quotations are as variable as the weather. One dealer asks $8.00 to $10.00 for the best, another $6.00 to $7.00, another $4.00 to $6.00, and still another asks "what will you give?" Of course the quality counts all through these figures but one can buy really good lilies at $4.00 to $6.00 and this is probably a fair average.

Carnations are another story altogether. Of the best grades there are none too many and good fancy bring $3.00 readily while a few specials go as high as $4.00 and $5.00. Good ordinaries bring $1.50 to $2.50, with Scott and that class at $1.00. A few Lawson and Red Bradt are the only ones in the $5.00 class; Crane, Marquis, White Cloud, Bradt and Nugget are in the $3.00 to $4.00 class and the lower grades of these and other sorts make up the cheaper ones.

Beauties are holding up pretty well at $3.00 a dozen for the best, and then $2.00, $1.50, $1.00 and 75 cents, with the medium lengths in greatest demand.

The supply of greenhouse grown bulbous flowers is slackening a little and there is a trifle better tone in the market for them, though prices are still low. The outdoor grown stock from southern points is arriving more freely but of course this is in a class by itself.

There are lots of callas and prices are low, but there seems to be a shortage of "green goods" such as smilax, asparagus and adiantum.

Local demand is light but fortunately shipping trade keeps up very well for the season and on the whole trade is apparently in a healthy condition for the season.

Various Items.

And now the Greeks are forming a "Union." It is currently reported that each member pays a fee of $5.00 and that when the "Union" declares a boycott against any of the wholesalers any member caught buying of him forfeits the five bucks. When any wholesaler orders a Greek to "quit wearing those flowers out with your hands," or vehemently informs him: "No, you can't have 'em for $3.00 a thousand; get out of here," he will be solemnly boycotted by The Amalgamated Association of Allied Chicago Greeks and he will then be up against the real thing. Charley Probst is the treasurer and holds the forfeits. We have not yet heard what the forfeits may be expended for when forfeited but would suggest a good dinner and a box of cigars to the boycotted wholesaler. May the forfeits be numerous if this carries and the wholesalers will count us in on the side.

Mr. Challenge Ventilator Evans of Indiana, was a recent visitor.

Geo. Piepgras has taken deskroom with Bentley & Co. while winding up his business affairs.

Mr. C. M. Dickinson, of E. H. Hunt's, says the Greek's Union is a good thing. He hopes for the honor of being the first to be boycotted so they will keep away from his place.

McKellar & Winterson are still doing a big business in general supplies and find no let up in trade.

The crocuses, scillas and snowdrops are in bloom at Lincoln Park and the hyacinths are pushing up their flower spikes.

There is talk of an elaborate floral parade at the time of the visit of President McKinley to the city early in June next. The officials of the National Business League, of which A. A. Burnham is secretary, is pushing the project.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. arranged a decoration for the Holland Society at the Grand Pacific Hotel this week of which a feature was an old Dutch windmill twelve feet high. Though flowers were freely used elsewhere the mill was covered merely with green sheet moss.

Mr. Flint Kennicott will soon make his usual spring move to his country place at "The Grove." Mr. Kennicott's father settled there in 1837 when Chicago was a village and was the pioneer nurseryman in this section.

"The Paeony, its place in the cut flower market and the best varieties," is the subject for the Florists' Club's regular meeting tomorrow (Friday) evening and the subject is to be treated by Chas. Klehm and Flint Kennicott.

RICHMOND, VA.

The Easter trade taken altogether was an improvement over last year, notwithstanding a rainy Saturday and backward weather. The plant trade seemed to suffer some, but all grades of the best material went off well and brought good prices. Easter lilies were not over plentiful and all the good stock went early. Hyacinths were in good supply and sold readily, but some were left over. The weather kept cut material in good shape and nearly to the day cut flowers of all descriptions were sold out, even violets which came down from Louisa in great boxes on all the trains. Supposing something like 80,000 violets were sold to this market.

The stores had good displays and all seem satisfied with results. Hammond and Mann & Brown were out for the biggest plums. Then came Harvey, Whitty, Mosmiller, Reynolds, Amory and Eby, followed by the market brigade, and last, but possibly not least, the new colored candidate—Forrester—who had all the work for "Brudder Jasper" of "De sun do move" fame.

Let the florists keep their eyes on Richmond. The business is certainly moving here and some day not far distant will reach dimensions to surprise some of those who regard the market as small. O.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Since my last report business has decreased and the prices cut to almost nothing. The glut started the early part of the past week, the best of stock being hard to dispose of and there are prospects of the glut continuing during the present week. Stock of all kinds can be bought at buyers' price. Fakirs are selling fine stock on the street at any price; 10 cents per dozen for fine carnations and roses just as cheap. Not only are roses selling cheap but all other flowers. Bulb stuff is dead, very little demand for it. Sweet peas are 25 cents per 100; valley and tulips $1 and $2; Harrisii and callas are $10. The growers and wholesalers find fault with the prices obtained for stock and with good reason. There has been entirely too much stock brought to this market for the light demand. The quality of the stock coming in at present is fairly good; in roses American Beauty has improved greatly. Violets are showing the effects of the spring weather and a few warm days will put them out of the market. This is all that can be said of the market this week.

Notes.

Tree planting has been very brisk so far this spring. Mr. C. C. Sanders reports that he is very busy just now planting trees, evergreens and shrubs.

C. Young & Sons Co. report large orders coming in for plants, seeds and bulbs. They expect a large trade this spring.

Mr. Wm. Bouche, the landscape gardener, reports that he is at present at Laughlin's place and is getting it in fine shape. Mr. Laughlin will spare no expense and will have the finest place around St. Louis. Sander's Nursery is furnishing all the plants, trees and shrubs.

According to the reports of the commissioners to the Pan-American Exposition, Mr. Wm. Bouche will have charge of the work for the Missouri exhibit and a better man could not be found to do credit to old Missouri.

Club Meeting.

The April meeting of the Florists' Club last Thursday was very poorly attended only ten members being present, most of the growers being too busy with spring trade. No essays were read, all being excused until the May meeting. The first ten per cent of the World's Fair subscription was ordered paid. J. J. Beneke resigned as chairman of the exhibition committee and Fred Meinhardt was appointed to the place by the president. Very little other business was transacted. Next regular meeting in May will be a sweet pea meeting.

Bowling.

The Florists' Bowling Club has started its summer bowling in order to be in shape for the Buffalo match. The attendance was poor for the first night, but a full attendance is promised for next Monday. The scores were as follows:

	1	2	3	4	5	T	Av.
J. J. Beneke	153	186	146	174	183	842	168

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business has fallen off considerably; plants are at a standstill; cut flowers are in long supply—an adopted term—hardly sounds right. Carnations are holding fairly well in price but roses have tumbled; $2.50 a doz. is about as good as you can get for five foot Beauties and Teas are down to $6 and $8 a 100 for the best, with the accent on the $6.

Violets are nearly over, likewise bulbous flowers. Would to heaven they were entirely over. One shipper alone sent 14,000 southern single daffodils to a commission house on Monday of this week. The stores seem fairly busy; there is a good deal going on still.

Various Items.

Stephen Mortensen has five acres of ground and 15,000 feet of glass at Southampton. To this plant he intends adding 5,000 feet of glass next summer. He grows roses exclusively. His Brides and Maids show great vigor. His young plant, grown in narrow houses are in splendid shape.

Jennings Bros. of Olney, who have the reputation of taking very fine roses to uptown stores, are going to tear down and rebuild a number of their houses next summer, using their patent benches and gutters.

Adolph Fahrenwald had a very heavy crop of special grade Beauties for Easter. His houses are full of stout canes that have far outgrown the seven-foot stakes to which they are tied.

There is an opening in this country for a specialist in araucarias; it is thought that over $100,000 go abroad annually for this "Christmas tree."

David Anderson of Garrettsford, Delaware county, will plant two 150-foot houses in American Beauties this summer. If he does them as well as Brides and Maids they will be very fine indeed.

Frank Blakeborough, of Clayton, N. J., formerly of Mt. Airy, reports good Easter business. This is only his second year but he is educating the natives to buy flowers and feels much encouraged.

Charles Zimmer, West Collingswood, N. J., reports excellent Easter business. He had some lilies late but there were many others in the same boat.

William J. Moore has put a fine new wagon on the street. Business is surely way up with this hustling commission man.

The April meeting of the club was favored with three splendid papers on the rose by John N. May, Summit, N. J., John H. Taylor, Bayside, Long Island, and Benjamin Durfee, Washington. These papers are to be sent to Dean Hole, who was elected an honorary member of the club. John Walker was also elected an honorary member.

Robert Craig has a promising lot of calceolarias well set with buds.

Jean Viaud is a likely bedding geranium. It is of the Bruant type, flowers large and double, color pink.

The Floral Exchange are said to have placed many young plants of Queen of Edgely rose in small lots among private gardeners.

Myers & Santman expect to grow Sunrise next season, it is understood, as a side bench rose in some Beauty houses.

It is estimated that the loss to all of us through the rainy Saturday before Easter was not less than $25,000. This is probably conservative.

John Westcott reports his wholesale Easter trade as ahead of last year, but the retail trade was ruined by the rain. This applies to all our cemetery florists.

William Wunder, Haines street near Limekiln pike, has a blue daisy which he thinks will prove useful for cut flowers.

Samuelson of Hatboro, has reappeared. He is said to have been seen at the Hyphen rose show.

Who is Phil? Why Phil, A. Delphia, of course. Phil.

Trade Conditions.

No more sympathy need be wasted on the Puritanical city of Beans-by-the-Bay. Things have been better since Easter than could be expected considering the weather and other ailments on this page of the almanac. The two weeks' rain held back the blossoms somewhat, as well as the customers, so that really there was not much of a glut after the very fair demand was supplied. Of course everything was quite closely cropped for Easter which helped materially in keeping goods down to marketable quantities. Violets even tried to be scarce for a few days, pinks not a bit plentiful and nothing in oversupply except large American Beauty roses, of which there never was such a supply forced upon the city. There is the sharpest kind of good natured rivalry between the salesmen of the E. M. Wood Co., Welch Bros., and Manter, with the assistance of Geo. Sutherland, who has the cut of the Exeter Rose Conservatories.

Like the great and only original American beauties these goods are shy in bloomers especially in cold weather and it is really remarkable that the sunny side of a cold New Hampshire hill can compete with the middle Atlantic states in their growth, even if no one challenges the crop of those hills on the genuine sort. But the Exeter people play a good game with them and their cooler temperature comes in good play during the next two months in keeping up a good color.

Beauties are now selling at from $1 to $6 per dozen in competition with a fair supply of Jacks and Brunners, Brides and Maids at from $2 to $16 per 100; pinks, $2 to $4 per 100 on good ordinary kinds; violets, 25 to 50 cents; bulb goods, lilies and quite an array of spring material at low prices. But quoted prices are of no value just now. It would take a trombone ten feet long to play the changes they will undergo during the next few days. Old Sol disturbs our business conditions more than any changes in the revenue tariff does anything else; it is his deal next, we have all "anted up" and are in the game.

THE EASTER TRADE.

SARATOGA, N. Y.—T. J. Totten reports Easter business as not so good as last year. It rained all day Saturday and Sunday. The wholesale trade was good, there being a large demand for lilies, which were scarce this year, about 60 per cent of the plants being diseased.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—E. J. Johnston reports Easter trade as very satisfactory. There was an increased demand for azaleas and other flowering plants. Bulbous stuff sold well. Short supply of carnations and lilies. Weather very stormy, making it difficult to deliver plants in good order.

OSHKOSH, WIS.—Isaac Miles reports Easter trade as 20 per cent better than last year, with lilies in fair supply and carnations very scarce. An abundance of roses, tulips, valley, forget-me-nots and hyacinths. Plant trade fair with a good supply of azaleas, cinerarias, hyacinths, ferns and palms.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.—J. A. Kenison reports that all the florists cleaned out well at Easter, pinks selling at 10 cents each, roses 15 cents and lilies 25 cents per blossom or bud. Churches, stores and private houses were decorated much more than usual and many orders were given florists to decorate graves.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.—Samuel S. Peckham reports: "Easter trade was very good in spite of the very rainy weather of Saturday; plants selling very well; lilies scarce and high, also carnations; violets very plenty, but sold well at fair prices. There seemed to be less church decorating this year than last."

BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO.—Poole & Purkhant report Easter sales as exceeding expectations, except in Harrisii lilies, which sold poorly. This firm made an elaborate display of plants and flowers Thursday and Friday, which was announced in the papers as a special free display, and it brought out a host of visitors.

ANDERSON, IND.—Stuart & Haugh report: "Easter trade this year was about 12 per cent better than that of 1900. Good demand for both plants and cut flowers, of which the supply was about equal to the demand, excepting in the case of Easter lilies, of which there was a shortage. Prices ruled about the same as last year."

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—A. Washburn & Son report: "Easter trade as compared with last year shows an increase for flowering plants and also for cut flowers. Easter lily and azalea plants were in good demand and in plentiful supply. Cut flowers, plenty, prices about as last year, and with an increased demand for daffodils, tulips and hyacinths."

RALEIGH, N. C.—H. Steinmetz says that Easter trade was about 25 per cent larger than last year, the principal demand being for cut flowers, such as roses, carnations, Harrisii lilies, violets and valley. Pot plants were sold only in limited numbers. It is astonishing how the demand for flowers at Easter has grown during the last five or six years.

ELGIN, ILL.—B. O'Neil reports: "I don't think the demand for plants and cut flowers was any greater this than last Easter, though I have done a large business myself. When the wholesale price of cut flowers more than doubles the week previous to Easter the church people at least will not pay the price. I believe in a reasonable price for plants and flowers at all seasons."

SOUTH BEND, IND.—Aug. F. Beyer reports: "Easter trade was very satisfactory and far ahead of last year. The demand for cut flowers was enormous and that for blooming plants was excellent. Trainor & Rettig did nearly twice as much business as last year. I sold all the cut flowers I had and had a great call for the old calla lily. We are all satisfied in this section."

FALL RIVER, MASS.—C. Warburton reports: "The weather was against a good Easter trade, it raining most of the week, but we sold out pretty clean. Violets sold well and there was plenty of roses and carnations and lots of bulbous stock left. Plants sold fairly well. The Japanese cherry was the only novelty, and sold well. Prices were about the same as last year."

ATLANTA, GA.—John A. Lambert reports Easter trade as extremely brisk, with only a moderate increase in plant sales but a notable increase in demand for cut flowers. Harrisiis were scarce. Carnations in good demand, with supply only fair. Maids and Brides went at $1.50 to $2.00 per dozen. Got better prices this year for bulbous flowers. Made-up baskets, etc., were in good demand at good prices.

NEW ORLEANS.—U. J. Virgin reports: "Cut Easter lilies had the most call for this Easter and prices were good. Next best, Brides; Maids sold out; Golden Gates sold well. Beauties had increased call over last year and stock was fine. Carnations and violets did not sell. Most call in plants was for pot lilies. Fern balls sold well. No call for palms, ferns or spirea. An increase in cash sales, about 25 per cent. Baskets had very little call."

PASSAIC, N. J.—A. van Leeuwen, Jr., reports: "Easter trade this year was fully up to the expectations, plant sales showing a decided gain over cut flowers, and but for the continual performance of Miss Rain, every florist's shop would have been cleaned out. The Messrs. P. Krug and Wm. McAllister had very creditable displays, the latter firm having a large annex up town. No special deviation from last year's business and supply well up to demand."

PORTLAND, ORE.—Clark Bros. report: "The Easter trade in this city was probably about 25 per cent above that of last year. The supply of salable stock was inadequate for the demand. Particularly was this so of carnations, which as usual are the great favorite among cut flower buyers in this part of the country. In plants, Easter lilies were the main article, with scarcely enough to go around. A few Cinerarias, Hydrangeas and Primroses found ready customers. Growing the bulbs at the trade seem to cut flowers."

BUTTE, MONT.—Last Sunday and the Easter business in Butte was about the same as last year in money. There were more pot plants sold, the demand being for Harrisii lilies, tulips and hyacinths. In cut flowers Maids and Brides, Harrisii lilies and carnations were mostly called for. Prices ruled some over last year. There was about half enough cut flowers around here to supply the trade, and plenty of pot plants. The churches were more elaborately decorated with plants than ever before, and not so many cut flowers used."

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—E. Nagel says: "Trade was good for Easter. There were more flowers in the stores than ever before. The department store and several fruit stores had a big supply and the florists were well stocked, but most everything was sold. There must have been nearly double the supply of cut flowers in town that there was last year. Most flowers were of good quality. Carnations and roses were most in demand, but in plants the lily is what everyone wants; next is the spirea; other flowering plants go slow. On the whole trade was very satisfactory."

ERIE, PA.—Easter week began very dull, cloudy and cold, with plenty of rain and some snow. Thursday and Friday were busy days, and Saturday there was a rush for potted plants and cut flowers. Carnations and violets were in great demand. Erie florists say that more plants and cut flowers were sold during the few days preceding the close of Lent than in the previous Easters, and also that prices were some better. Carnations sold rapidly at 75 cents per dozen, and some of the more fancy varieties brought as high as $1. Violets at $1.50 to $2. Roses at $1.50 to $2 per dozen.

PAWTUCKET, R. I.—James Hockey reports: "As regards the cities of Pawtucket and Providence prices were about 10 per cent better than last year. Cut flowers were in great demand. Carnations very short in supply; prices 75 cents to $1.50 per dozen. Violets in good demand. Tulips, paper whites and Von Sion in pots sold well. Most growers were late with Harrisii, and these and callas were in equal demand; prices $15 to $25 per 100. On account of the extremely wet weather there was quite a number of pot plants left over; still the boys appear to be happy. A noticeable feature was the free use of paper whites and daffodils in church decorations. The writer cleared out everything he could get the knife on."

BURLINGTON, N. J.—W. R. Bishop says: "Our florists here are well pleased with their Easter trade. John Sholl reports his sales of both plants and cut flowers (mostly carnations) very much ahead of last year, and that by 10 o'clock Saturday evening he had scarcely any plants left. Joseph Smith made a specialty of hydrangeas, and having nice plants in bloom they sold well. He also had a good supply of tulips and hyacinths, and at the end of the week had but few left. J. H. Lukens makes a specialty of lily of the valley and has the reputation of growing unusually fine blooms. Lewis R. Hancock makes a specialty of carnations and violets and is well pleased with his sales. He now grows but few roses, finding violets and carnations far more profitable."

Evansville, Ind.—J. H. Wade & Co. report: "Easter trade was about the same as last year as regards prices. Cut flowers were most in demand. Not much call for plants except lilies, which did not pan out as well as last year. In cut flowers carnations were in the lead, with roses a good second. Bulbous stuff was slow sale, except daffodils. Supply of both flowers and plants was equal to demand. Quality fair to good. Good carnations are coming to the front with both feet and hitting the ground hard. Not the ¾ to 1¼-inch blooms, but the 2½ to 3-inch flowers, with good substance. Flimsy stuff won't go, and stem must be strong enough to carry the flower erect. The people will not be satisfied with less. Have had some good Jubilee for red and Flora Hill for white. But Hill does not seem to be a good grower, being rather weak and shaky so far. Perhaps it will do better later."

Wilkesbarre, Pa.—Business, as reported from all florists, wholesale and retail, 25 per cent in advance of last year, and would have shown a greater percentage if the weather had not been so inclement. Roses plentiful and good; carnations scarce and poor, but high in price; lilies sold clean at 25 cents per flower; hydrangeas not in as good demand as other years; azaleas in good demand. Eastern wholesale commission men, anticipating a shortage in carnations, refused to promise any quantity to retail florists, promising hundreds where thousands were asked for, but owing to the heavy storm in cities took advantage of orders on their books and shipped largely to florists, who found themselves on Saturday night and Sunday loaded down with some carnations rather antiquated, but still they were all cleaned up, and by Monday refrigerators were emptied and the Easter of 1901 was satisfactory to both wholesaler and retailer.

Atchison, Kan.—Mangelsdorf Bros. report Easter trade as the best they ever had. All cut flowers were completely cleaned up and the sale of pot plants was very good especially of lilies.

POLYGONUM BALDSCHUANICUM.

NEW HARDY CLIMBER

Polygonum Baldschuanicum

This plant has been the subject of much comment by the horticulturists of the Old World the past two or three years and all agree that it is one of the finest hardy climbing plants ever introduced. It is of rapid growth, frequently growing from ten to twelve feet high in one season. The stems are twining and cling for support to any object within reach. Every small branch terminates in a panicle of white flowers, which are produced in the greatest profusion from July to September. A plant that is certain to meet with popular favor. Strong plants, 75 cents each.

ST. PAUL.

The Easter Trade.

Easter with all its trouble and fun has come and gone. The weather? Well, it could have been worse and it could have been better. The first part of the week was extremely fine, nice and warm for bringing in lilies and other stock, but Friday morning started in with heavy falls of rain mingled with sleet, snow and other cold stuff, and kept it up steadily for twelve hours, many of our storekeeping florists wearing a sorry face in consequence. But Saturday it cleared up nicely and it was an ideal day for delivering. The rush of business was simply grand. Thousands of lilies were sold and soon there was a shortage.

Most all our florists grew longiflorums (as Harrisii are too much diseased), but most of the plants were too short and lots of them produced only two to three flowers.

L. L. May & Co.'s shipping trade was larger than ever. Holm & Olson did a big business, having the best family trade upon the hill. E. F. Lemke had all he could handle. He had the finest of home grown hydrangeas, the trusses measuring 18 to 20 inches across. Haugen & Swanson had several hundred pots of Lady Campbell violets that sold readily at $1.00 per pot.

Carnations were more than scarce and seemed to be off crop all around. Roses were more plenty. Church decorations were more elaborate than ever, and it was evident that money for this purpose was more easily collected than in the past.

I will close by saying in the name of the craft, "All is well."

CHRIS. BUSSJAEGER.

WICHITA, KAN.

Easter trade was very satisfactory, being much better than last year. C. P. Mueller reports 25 per cent increase, C. A. Rose about the same, W. H. Culp & Co. 33 per cent, and all report good business.

Plant trade was good, with fair supply, except in lilies, which, owing to disease and mixed stock, were slow and irregular. Culp & Co. being the only ones who had anything near a supply—about 50 per cent of their stock coming on time.

Cut flowers sold well, good stock bringing prices about 50 per cent advance over ordinary retail prices. Considerable stock was shipped in from Chicago and other markets. This stock was generally satisfactory, although some complaint is made of sleepy carnations and of damaged lilies caused by poor packing. American Beauties sold well and were good.

Churches as a rule were better decorated than usual, about all the available stock of decorative plants being used for this purpose.

Weather was fine, both Saturday and Sunday being springlike days with little or no wind, although Friday started in with enough wet snow to make the ground white and a high wind from the north, which did some damage over the city, although none of the florists were much damaged except by a scare at the prospect of a spoiled Easter trade, which happily did not materialize. FRANKLIN, PA.

Volume of Easter business was larger than last year, but cannot say how much. With us demand for plants in bloom was mainly for lilies, azaleas and tulips in pans, in the order named, with sales of hyacinths in pots and pans, cinerarias, daffodils in pans, Crimson Rambler roses, ferns and palms in smaller numbers.

In flowers carnations were called for first, last and all the time, and although we had a good supply could have sold more. Roses were asked for and sold in limited quantity. But most buyers choose a cheaper flower. Lilies sold well and the list ended with violets, tulips, hyacinths, daffodils, chrysanthemums, Marguerites and assorted bunches. Prices were about the same as last year, except for violets, which were cheaper.

We have a quantity of plants in bloom left, but our stock was much larger to begin with, and a rainy Saturday interfered with sales. Plants were in fine condition. Longiflorum lilies being stout and firm, requiring no stakes, and furnished to the pots with dark, bright leaves, and free from split flowers and insects. Pans of hyacinths and double tulips were just right, not being too much opened, but we had too many in large pans; a majority of buyers choosing 5 and 6-inch pans at the lower price; and this class of customers is well worth catering to.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

Well, once again Easter has come and gone, and the Dallas florists draw a long breath. The Texas Seed and Floral Company report an advance of 50 per cent over former years in their sales. All good stock sold well. Their large double store was literally packed with azaleas, palms and Easter lilies, all of which were disposed of before evening. In cut flowers, Bride and Maid roses were plentiful, and sold readily at $3 per dozen. Beauties, a good supply, all sold out at $6 to $12 for fancy. Bulbous stuff was scarce and in little demand. Carnations sold well and led the "van" in cut flowers. Violets scarce and demand good, especially for single. No call for valley. Many more Easter lilies could have been sold. Everything was cleaned up before 9 p. m., both in cut flowers and plants.

The special decorations of the Texas Seed and Floral Company in their store this season were very highly commented upon and speak well for the energy of this enterprising firm, and, by the way, this firm will have something to show in new carnations another season if some of their promising seedlings hold up to the present standard. THE FLORISTS' MANUAL.
A Reference Book for Commercial Florists

MONTREAL.

Easter, 1901, will be remembered by the trade here for a long time, by the growers on account of the cold, dark weather which preceded it, and thus upset calculations and caused several crops to be late, and by the retailers on account of the very bad condition of the streets, thus making the work of delivering plants a very difficult one.

However, in spite of drawbacks, so far as can be learned, business was very satisfactory all around. Almost everything in the way of good plants was easily disposed of and at good prices. The same may be said of cut flowers. In plants, lilies were in pretty good supply, but the quality, with one or two exceptions, was not good. There is lots of disease around here this year. Spireas were plentiful and good, also tulips, hyacinths, daffs, etc., lilacs, rhododendrons, azaleas, snowballs, genistas, etc., were in limited supply, but there is not a big demand for them here.

One of the best selling things was a fine lot of Ramblers that one grower had in good shape in 5 and 6-inch pots. These were plants rooted about a year ago, planted out like carnations, dug up in the fall and potted about New Year's.

There was very little made up work in baskets this year. Montreal has not got educated to that yet, but I suppose it is the florists' own fault for not offering tastefully made up baskets, etc., of plants. Palms or ferns were not in demand and deutzias were not liked. In cut flowers, violets had a great call and soon ran out of supply. Beauties also sold well, as did all colored roses. Red roses were very scarce. The supply of carnations was short, but to the surprise of some there were some white and light pink left unsold at the end of the day. Some of the local stock of Lawson, Marquis and Morning Glory (what a poor name) was extra good, and sold for good prices. Mignonette was in good supply, also all bulbous stuff, such as daffs, Narcissus princeps, Golden Spur, poeticus, etc. Valley fair.

Everything considered, trade must have have been pretty good, as some say it was better than last year and others say about the same. Had the weather been more favorable there would have been a large quantity of good plants available, which now will probably have to be sold at a loss, unless business should be unusually good, which we will hope for. SLEEPY.

OTTAWA, ONT.

Easter sales in the city altogether must have been 50 per cent more than last year. The older florists report an increase, and Wright, who opened a store last year, had an extra store for plants and did a big business in both, especially in lilies. Graham Bros. were strong in lilies also. They had a big stock of azaleas, which were mostly all sold.

Scrim had two stores and sold out most every plant of any value. Heath, which he has made a specialty of for the last couple of years, again hung fire. He will not grow much of it in pot-next year. It is too rich for Ottawa blood. The most popular plants were azaleas, lilies, roses and spirea. Bulb stock was overdone. Half the growers in the city had their windows full of hyacinths, daffs and tulips. C. SCRIM.

OSWEGO, N. Y.

Less call for cut flowers at Easter, carnations having the preference, violets next, roses hereabouts having a black eye for their keeping qualities, chiefly on account of not enough being grown here to meet the demand and that demand being filled with goods that have often been cut from two to seven days.

Quite a shortage of Easter lilies, although about a thousand were grown among the florists here there was but about fifty salable; they would not respond in growth to the best of treatment and were extremely irregular in their health and appearance.

Bulbous product had to fill the bill and seemed to satisfy. Good cinerarias sold well, but anything out of the ordinary, such as genistas, calceolarias, begonias, Rambler roses, stocks, pelargoniums, etc., would only be admired and not bought. Some writers are continually harping that florists do not grow variety enough; let those same writers try the variety business and see if it will pay their coal bill.

Only a limited demand for azaleas, many buyers heaving a sigh of relief when they found they could not buy a two dollar lily for an Easter present to a dear friend and gladly bought a twenty-five cent hyacinth and had the delighted florist deliver it about two miles away at exactly eight minutes past four p. m., and the 'phone at your elbow to tell you that it was not there yet and they did not want it now, and I believe wishing in their hearts they had sent a pound of ten-cent candy instead.

The easter lily with its lost vitality is responsible for a great shortage in florists' receipts on one of the days that he should be reimbursed for cost, coal and constant care.

Easter Week.

Easter week in all was very pleasant. It opened fair, but on Thursday a heavy snow storm struck us and things looked squally. Friday, Saturday and Sunday though were summer days. Trade was about 15 per cent better than last year. To be sure, something was left over, but the market was heavily stocked.

Plants took the lead and some very pretty things were seen. As was expected, lilies turned out short and by Friday night several of the stores had a shut-down. A grand lot of azaleas were offered and cleaned out pretty well, about $5 being the average price, with a few good ones at $8 to $10. Ramblers were quite abundant, but only the best sold. A few good hybrids also found ready sale. Lilacs were grand and sold at a good price. Plant baskets proved very popular, the price ranging from $8 to $15.

In cut flowers a good trade was done. They showed up in good quantities Saturday, but Sunday morning being bright, the market was well cleaned up. Beauties and violets took the lead; fancy carnations perhaps next in favor. Not so much bulbous stuff was offered as in other years, but I guess it wasn't missed.

On Easter Monday the largest reception of the season was given and called for a good sized decoration. Hundreds of Beauties, Marquis carnations and daffodils were used. The decorations were by the Park Floral Company. A special feature was the table decoration, miniature electric lights being used, shaded to match the foliage and flower of the Beauties, they being used in the centerpiece. Rocky.

Easter Trade.

Easter has come and gone but its brightness is left reflected on the faces of our Denver florists, for it was undoubtedly the best day that they have ever had, there being lots of flowers, and what is the best of all, a great demand. Lilies were sold out early and about the only flower that was left over was the modest violet, the supply of which was large. A great many blooming plants were disposed of—more than usual.

Various Items.

For the plant trade the florists are anticipating a large demand for miscellaneous plants, as there is very little done here in the way of design or carpet bedding outside of the city park, where it is carried on quite extensively. These flower beds and designs are as fine as anywhere in the world, owing to the bright sun that we get continuously bringing out the colors in such a vivid manner. All visitors are struck at once on beholding them. A bed of geraniums will be about a foot high and one mass of bloom, and so with all other flowers. The parks are supplied with plants from their own greenhouses, which are under the charge of Superintendent Graham and Foreman Davies. Their output this year will be about 150,000.

Hurt Bros. have moved their flower store to Fifteenth street in one of the busiest portions of the city, and are likely to do a good business at their new stand.

We had Adam Graham, of Cleveland, Ohio, as a visitor. He was on his return from California. Thorne.

ST. PAUL.

Easter will go on record as one of the best, if not the best, ever known here. The weather was marred by rain on Friday which undoubtedly curtailed sales somewhat. However it was nice and mild for delivering plants and there were few or no complaints on account of damage.

Contrary to expectations there were enough lilies to go around and where a shortage was apparent a few weeks before, a small surplus was found when deliveries had all been made. The favorable weather for two weeks preceding Easter brought about belated stock in good shape, though the effects of forcing were apparent in many plants.

There was nothing particularly new or striking offered this season. Lilies were as popular as usual. Hydrangeas and azaleas sold extremely well. Hybrid roses sold well, as usual. Ramblers were in good demand though not as eagerly sought for as when first introduced. Bulbous stock went fairly well with the smaller growers but will never be popular with the best trade here. Pans of extra fine hyacinths containing four to six bulbs each were almost a drug on the market.

In cut flowers the most marked demand was for colored flowers in contrast with the demand for white flowers in former seasons. Fancy carnations sold at sight bringing as much as and selling more freely than roses. Beauties were in good demand though prices ruled high and good stock scarce. There was a great call for violets which retailed at $2.00 per 100 and thousands were disposed of at these figures.

The stores all had good displays. L. L. May & Co. had their large conservatory and store filled to overflowing. A. S. Swanson had an overflow display at 6th and Wabasha. Holm & Olsen had their store packed solid with plants. Lemke had his usual display of good stock in both stores, while C. Vogt, O. Hiersekorn and all the others had dazzling displays.

The shipping trade was very good both in plants and cut flowers.

Prospects for future trade are very encouraging and spring bedding stock should be in good demand. X. Y. Z.

CINCINNATI.

Critchell's have closed their city store at 110 E. 4th St. and will hereafter grow for the wholesale trade only. Their address now is 719 North Crescent Ave.

Mr. B. P. Critchell, superintendent of parks, has sufficiently recovered from his recent illness to attend to business and visited the park office for the first time last Tuesday.

Augusta, Me.—G. P. Sanborn reports Easter sales as larger than ever before, with carnations and roses very scarce.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—I. N. Kramer & Son say that with them Easter trade was better than last year, in both cut flowers and plants.

Malden, Mass.—E. D. Kaulback & Son say their Easter trade was about the same as usual, but believe it would have been much larger had the weather been fair.

Brattleboro Vt.—C. E. Allen says Easter sales were larger than last year, with carnations and lilies in most demand. Potted plants sold in limited quantities.

Needham, Mass.—Denys Zingiebel reports: "Our market is in Boston. The highest price ever obtained for carnations was realized, Lawson bringing easily $10 per 100, and Marquis a close second, at $8."

Norwalk, Conn.—H. F. Byxbee reports supply ahead of demand for Easter, though demand was fair considering that Saturday was a very stormy day. The call was more for blooming plants than for cut flowers.

Carlisle, Pa.—Jesse Robbins reports Easter trade as fully 25 per cent better than last year, and that it would have been still better had not Saturday been an extremely disagreeable day. There was an increased demand for flowering plants.

R. S. H.—The greenhouse you describe is hardly large enough to make a business. If you have some other occupation, you might grow a few bedding plants for local demand as a side issue. You could not produce enough flowers in the house to make shipment to market profitable. With the addition of some hot-beds you might be able to produce enough spring bedding plants to make it worth while, providing there is sufficient local demand for them.

Rockford Ill.—The Rockford Star has inaugurated a movement looking to the embellishment of the city with plants and flowers this summer and the florists are co-operating by contributing plants, etc., to be awarded as prizes to those having the best decorated grounds, etc., during the summer. The florists who have contributed so far are H. W. Buckbee, R. H. Shumway, W. B. Reynolds, W. S. Hizer and J. J. Soper. The prizes are to be awarded by a committee selected by the Federation of Women's Clubs.

Dallas, Tex.—The Texas Seed and Floral Co. will this summer enlarge their fine plant to double its present size and will also build new and modern packing sheds. They will also put in a waterworks of their own, building a reservoir and erecting tanks 80 feet above, using a gasoline engine for forcing the water up into the tank, with direct pressure from engine when needed. F. W. Beach, formerly of Richmond, Ind., is now superintendent of this plant.

New Orleans, La.—At a recent meeting of the New Orleans Horticultural Society it was decided to give a chrysanthemum show in the fall, and the following committee on arrangements was appointed: P. Abele, ex-officio; J. Steckler, E. Baker, J. Eblen, E. Valdejo, Charles Eble, Harry Papworth, J. St. Mard, Dan Newsham, secretary.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—M. Christopherson reports that Easter trade in this city must have been double that of last year. American Beauties and Harrisii were never before so universally displayed. The florists all seemed to be very busy.

Cincinnati, O.—The will of Thomas Knott, the florist, leaves a $50,000 estate to his wife for life. After her death the property goes to the children.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—John G. Heinl & Son say it was the best Easter they ever had. Were short of everything in cut flowers. More palms and ferns used than ever before.

KEOKUK, IOWA.—Laisle & Haines report Easter as larger than heretofore in both cut flowers and plants, the demand for lilies and azaleas being especially strong, and with plenty to supply the demand.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Wedding Decorations.

Very often some detestable forms of "greening" can be noticed in work done by alleged "best houses." For instance, you will see Florida palm leaves arranged to form a flat background, and the delicate greenhouse flowers are put among the coarsest of outdoor greens. It should be remembered that the very finest decorations can be made entirely of greens; the arranging of them is as important as the arranging of flowers; anything can be used but there is a proper place for everything.

Just at this time wild smilax from Alabama furnishes us with the most effective material. Perhaps you will have noticed that there are two varieties of this smilax shipped; one has long narrow leaves, keeps very poorly and is otherwise inferior to the round leaved berried kind. Another thing we notice the boxes are being packed on the principle used by the grower who measures his rose stems by the quarter inch; many of the cases of wild smilax coming into New York are frauds, for according to what is charged for them the cultivation of this article promises better returns than cotton, corn or any of the farm products. The increasing use of it justifies serious consideration.

Well, as to its usage, we use it wherever we can because there is nothing to equal it, and it looks all the better if trimmed off here and there with a few long strings of asparagus. We never stick palm leaves here and there as if spasmodically done; we prefer to group greens. Suppose we have a long wall, balcony or other space to cover, first put up your vine-like tracery of wild smilax (this is apt to be too monotonously regular) and a panel cluster of magnolia, laurel, needle pine, or almost any evergreen will add character to your work. Avoid sameness; the eye can "size up" some decorations, like at our annual flower shows, in one sweep; that is an unfortunate thing to happen to any sized decoration. Usually temporary picked up "help" is sent to fix up the church; this is a mistake.

Of course palms may or may not be made the crowning feature of any large decoration; they are expensive. In cases where very tall effects are desirous, and this is nearly always required, at least each side every altar, 'tis cheapest and best to make up immense sabal palms which can easily be done. If you have no natural stump moss up a piece of scantling, stick it in a weighted green tub, arrange your palm leaves as if they were growing; you can easily make a good natural effect, but be careful to hide the ground work. Another good way is to rig up a round pillar effect with wire netting and stick your leaves in it; this dispenses with moss.

The use of wire netting is becoming more regular in difficult wall decorations, or where nail driving is prohibited. The old system of stringing wires to cover a roof for instance is done away with in favor of the net work. Stiff garlands such as that made from laurel or other greens are not strictly correct for church weddings. The green work should have a pastoral tinge to it. There is too much ribbon work introduced into church decoration, it is a cheap form of deceptive decoration and is inappropriate in church which teaches the barefulness of frivolity. Use flowers and greens with all the profusion you can and less school girlish ideas.

Remember, "any old color" won't do at wedding decorations; purple and melancholy colors are out of place. They should never be used unless at a funeral. Bright colors, however, are being more generally adopted. The "all green and white" craze is dying out, as it should do. We always imagine the church is fixed up for a funeral where there is an entirety of sickly tones. A wedding decoration, no matter where it is, should have a festive insinuation about it. This can best be accomplished by taking advantage of pillars, balconies or elevated positions where a spray of greens and a cluster of flowers may delight the eye.

A Floral Book.

In the meantime see that you are ready for early plant trade. A window box or vase of pansies outside your own store might bring you some good orders. Imported plants of Aucuba Japonica and Laurus rotundifolia are being extensively used here for early spring vase work; large specimens of the latter are fine for general decorative work. IVERA.

A FLORAL BOOK.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of a floral book arranged by Walter Kreithling, Chicago, for the funeral of the late A. C. McClurg, head of the great publishing house.

The design is 4 by 3 feet in size, the pages being of Bride roses set solidly and the edges of the book being of Bridesmaid roses. The two pages of the open book are separated by Perle roses. There is no lettering on the pages but the lines are indicated by lily of the valley. The back and edges are relieved by Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri. On the lower corner of the right hand page is a 24 inch wreath of violets.

The price of the design was $100 and it contained 1,800 roses, 200 valley and 2,500 violets. Miss Annie Kreitling was the artist.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

Exhibition Flowers.

"Does a chrysanthemum plant need a longer season of growth than is usually given it, in order to produce the very finest flowers for exhibition?"

This question was asked me and I answered "Undoubtedly it does." It is a question that does not affect the purely commercial grower so much because nowadays he does not cut so much of a figure on the exhibition table, the private grower having practically elbowed him out, in the eastern exhibitions anyway, but it does affect the man who grows or wants to grow the finest flowers.

I see the New York Florists' Club is issuing a comprehensive schedule for a show in Madison Square Garden this year and since New York is falling into line with Boston, Chicago and the other large cities with regard to holding an exhibition, and is issuing its prize list in good season, we may conclude that there will be more exhibition flowers grown this year. Let us then see what we can evolve from our experience, in regard to early versus late propagation, as affecting the size and finish of the flowers.

The finest flowers I ever grew, in my own humble opinion, were cut from a batch of Robinson that were rooted in December. These were kept cool all winter but still moving gently and early in March planted permanently in boxes four feet long and ten inches wide. The plants were kept to single stem and were placed outside during May and June. Early in July they were placed in a large airy house and stayed there for the remainder of the season. They attained a height of six to seven feet and the flowers were of superb finish. This may be called an extreme case as hardly one man in a thousand has facilities for handling a batch of plants in such a manner and I hardly think it necessary if he had.

Cuttings rooted in February or March and kept to single stem have always given splendid results with us. I have never yet obtained flowers of the same quality and finish from cuttings struck end of May or early in June. The explanation of this is simple enough. If the plant is started early, before the intense heat of early summer, it will make a stocky short-jointed growth and will continue to make such growth if treated rationally. This will insure a natural maturation of the tissues of the plant and the wood will be what is called "ripe." Contrast this kind of growth with the growth you get from later rooted cuttings which run up very quickly after being planted out, and you can see at a glance where the difference comes in.

You may argue that we get so much sun here that the plant will get properly matured anyway and your worst trouble is to keep them from getting too hard and stunted unless you shade your house. There is a difference and a wide one between a natural ripening of the wood and an unnatural premature ripening, or rather roasting, from a hot sun. I have heard growers claim to get just as good flowers from late rooted stock as earlier, but my own experience teaches me otherwise. The flowers may perhaps have as large a spread but investigation always shows them to be deficient in depth, finish, and lasting qualities, and these are points that count for much in exhibition flowers. Brian Borg.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Trees and Shrubs.

Florists often combine a little of the nursery business with their bedding plants and supply everything for the garden. We have a curious spring. Only a few days' fine weather and then a heavy snow storm. All deciduous trees and shrubs must be got into the ground without delay. The rule is if they have started to grow it is risky to move them and in a few days the time will be over. Nearly all trees and shrubs should be pruned when planting and this will particularly help those that are transplanted late. They are bound to have lost their working fibers and cannot supply sap enough to keep the tops growing. You will often see a tree expand its leaves feebly and then collapse because it has no working roots to support it.

I am aware that I am late in giving any hints on deciduous trees and shrubs, but in plenty of time for the evergreens, so-called, or conifers as they should be called. The middle of May is plenty early enough for these. In fact, they should not be moved till the growth starts and if you are buying any see that the nurseryman does not deliver them till the proper time. I have frequently had occasion to give you what, in my humble opinion, is the only way to plant a tree or shrub or evergreen. It is little use to dig down more than a few inches lower than the length of the roots or depth of ball for you don't want the roots to go down, and in but a few trees are they inclined to. But give them all the width you can afford. If it is a prepared and trenched border that you are going to plant shrubs in, then a hole large enough for the roots is sufficient, but in the case of single specimens any distance apart the ground is seldom all prepared and a hole is dug especially for the tree. Make it wide and put in good soil and manure and you will be correspondingly rewarded in the growth of your tree.

Never in the case of trees and evergreens plant more than two inches lower than they have been growing in the nursery.

I believe in getting the tree in proper position and sufficient soil around and among the roots to firm them, or we will say the soil filled in to within four or five inches of the surface, then pour in water enough to thoroughly soak every particle of soil. This carries the soil compactly around every root, a most important point. After the water has soaked in then fill up with dry soil, which acts as a mulch. I am sure this is the successful way, the right way and only way, and worth many waterings on the surface. If you have to water on the surface then it pays well to spread an inch or two of stable manure round the tree or shrub as wide as the excavation.

Sweet Peas.

It is to be hoped that you sowed sweet peas the moment the ground could be worked. I often see great neglect in giving them some support. It should be given them when they are a few inches out of the ground, and not wait till they are a foot high and flopped over.

Asters.

If your asters are large enough to transplant and the ground is dry, there is no need of delaying the planting. A chilly night does not hurt them.

Crimson Ramblers.

We have tried again the Crimson Ramblers lifted last November and forced for Easter, and with us it was a dead failure. I believe this was largely because we did not have them on our own grounds and had to purchase them and have them shipped a few hundred miles. It is a good plan to plant out a few hundred small plants this spring on a good piece of soil. The strongest can be lifted this fall and the weaker left for another year.

With our experience of the past, we shall, however, stick to our old plan of potting some strong plants about now, cutting the canes back to a few eyes, and then when they break leaving only five or six of the best growths and these we will endeavor to grow into fine canes. We start them, of course, as cool as possible, but keep them under glass all summer in the full light and put them out of doors to harden up the growth in September or October. The advantage of these plants is that they are sure to flower. With any kind of management they are bound to be a success.

Last year we were troubled with mildew when they were making their strongest growth in June. Allowing them to get very dry was, I believe, the cause. Don't let mildew attack them or it badly hurts their growth.

I tried a similar method last spring with Ulrich Brunner and some other hybrid perpetuals, growing them in pots during the summer and cutting them down in winter and forcing. They produced good flowers, but it is not necessary for Easter forcing with hybrids, because they force easily from lifted plants. You have to cut a good deal of wood away from them, while the ramblers are very top-heavy. William Scott.

Golfe Juan

to visit the Villa Menier, another superb place with a long frontage to the sea. Its spacious grounds are well planted, showing fine massed effects of palms and bamboos, and there are giant trees of Eucalyptus globulus, which were in flower at the time. M. Riffaud, the gardener, highly praised the eucalyptus for exposed situations such as this, saying it was rarely broken by the strongest winds. Araucaria excelsa was represented by several magnificent trees 50 to 60 feet high. Adjoining is the garden of the Villa Valetta, its most noteworthy feature being a splendid group of Washingtonia filifera.

Les Cocottiers

was next visited. It is a nursery, but, as the name would imply, is named after the cocos palms, of which it possesses a group of truly marvelous specimens of C. plumosus. They are growing at the foot of a rocky hill, and have grand columnar stems 20 to 25 feet high, surmounted by splendid leafage, a picture of luxuriant health. The world-famed nurseries of M. Nabonnand are next encountered, and they, too, have beautiful palms, although roses are the special culture.

A few miles more along the lovely coast, and we come to another garden spot with much commercial floriculture, and having some large, comparatively level areas, and fine facilities for extensive culture. In every flower store throughout the trip we had seen carnations. At Antibes we found a grower of carnations, by name M. Cariat. He has the largest glass establishment we saw, and everything well grown. Fifty houses, ranging in length from 100 to 150 feet, are devoted to carnations, all splendidly grown and abundant in flower; but what a disappointment when judged by the standard of those we have in this country. While appreciating the gravity of the assertion, still it must be asserted every carnation seen here was absolutely worthless for the American market. Almost all were bursters, and the majority of them variegated in color, in hues often by no means pleasing. The houses are cheaply constructed, and the only provision for heating was a little stove standing about the center of the house, in which a small wood fire is lighted for a few hours when occasion requires. The plants are set in the ground in rows about two feet apart. Doubtless our fine carnations would grow as well there, for they would have the same bright sunshine with solar instead of artificial heat. Roses were very well done. An immense block of glass approximating an acre was planted entirely with Marechal Niel rose trained to transverse trellises. The earliest batch was just commencing to bloom, slight artificial heat being used; but solar heat suffices for the two batches that follow. Hybrid perpetual roses are forced in immense quantities. They are first established in the open ground and the house erected over them when strong enough to force. A large block of smilax (myrsiphyllum) was growing in an open slat house, and there was a splendid lot; but M. Cariat said even grown thus he could not compete with northern cultivators. At the time of our visit he was doubling the size of his establishment, a six-acre tract being graded into a series of four immense terraces, solely for roses and carnations.

The Villa Thuret, at Antibes, was visited next. It is a public garden of great botanical interest, the collection consisting of everything known to be hardy along the Riviera. This garden contains the first eucalyptus planted in the south of France, and it is a fine tree, though not equal in dimensions to the one previously noted at Hyeres. The first Jubæa spectabilis planted in the south is here also, and a magnificent specimen, having an immense stem, girthing about 12 feet, is 20 feet or more in height, with a proportionate crown of leaves. Pittosporums, acacias and other flowering shrubs and trees are represented in great variety.

The Cap d'Antibes is a bold, olive-clad promontory, jutting far out into the sea, and at its extremity is the Villa Eilen-Roc. En route we pass by a number of little flower farms where violets, anemones, ranunculus and narcissus are being gathered, bunched and packed for northern markets; notice also a row of great agaves by the roadside, of which a dozen had recently flowered, minus of tree dimensions and other familiar plants large in stature and luxuriance of growth. A long, rocky foreshore constitutes the garden of the Villa Eilen-Roc, and hours might be profitably spent there enjoying its wealth of plant beauty—the aloes, agaves, opuntias, crassulas, mesembryanthemums and hosts of graceful foliage and flowering plants that have been naturalized in a real rock garden. The congenial conditions may be realized, for on the lawn above stand immense trees of Ficus macrophylla and Oreopanax dactylifolium, while the flower beds are filled with Chinese primulas and Persian cyclamen, and aspidistra and begonia Rex were an undergrowth and ground cover, among groups of pittosporums.

though popular as a resort, is horticulturally far behind its neighboring places. It has a town garden, however, along the sea front that will be better with age, and which must have involved enormous expense in the making, as it is built over the broad estuary of a river that flows into the sea at this point. The broad "Promenade des Anglais," too, is planted with Phœnix, and has many flower beds. A short stay suffices here and we hasten on to

to see the magnificent gardens that surround the Casino. They are a revelation of beauty, and planted with such a variety of things one hardly knows what to single out for special mention. Having climbed the steps that lead up to the Casino from the railway station we were first astonished by a great mass of Aloe ferox in flower, a hundred spikes of fiery crimson, vividly effective. We pass round, however, to the town side, and note first the formal garden, which is in reality a long vista, terminated by the Casino. The garden is slightly depressed, and the vista has been formed by a fine piece of planting. An avenue of washingtonias alone would be effective, but this has been made lighter in effect and doubly beautiful by alternating each palm with an Australian tree, Brachychiton populifolium, a tree of singular grace and distinctiveness, having a smooth stem, of pyramidal tapering growth, and gray-green leaves; in fact, it might be called an evergreen aspen. This is the only piece of formal gardening; elsewhere natural arrangements prevail, and the gardens teem with rare and choice specimens and groups planted to the best advantage. Among palms we noted Thrinax Chuco, a rare species with a spiny stem; Pritchardia nobilis, truly noble Cocos australis in many fine specimens; Brahea Roezli here as elsewhere wonderful in color; Chamærops filifera, with leaves cut into narrow segments; C. Martiana, a rare and distinct species; Cocos Blumenavi, stately, tall and graceful; C. cycadifolia, with a slender 30-foot stem and a heavy head of cycas-like leaves; Corypha australis, Phœnix spinosa, Latania borbonica, while an exceptionally tall date palm gave support to a 30-foot specimen of Cereus quadriformis. Ficus macrophylla was represented by a tree about 40 feet high, with a branch spread nearly 30 feet in diameter. F. rubiginosa, too, was a handsome tree; but quaint, in fact unique, was a specimen of F. Roxburghi that had developed aerial roots like the banyan, of which there were five masses, having an 8-foot descension at almost equal distances round the stem, and all having entered the ground the tree was certainly securely anchored.

Isolated upon the grass was a large plant of Strelitzia regina in flower, while in a more sheltered nook was a marvelous mass of Strelitzia augusta, 30 feet in height, half as much in diameter, with enormous musa-like leaves. Yucca baccata and Y. guatemalensis 20 feet in height, Aralia palmata, Orecpanax dactylifolium, dasylirions, opuntias and bamboos of tropical stature and luxuriance were noted. In fact, if time and space permitted, much more might be said of many rare and choice plants, all hardy and happily at home here.

This wonderful garden is a monument of the most enduring character to the capacity and ability of M. Van den Daele, who has made it what it is during the twenty-one years he has had the direction of it. Its floral features, too, are on the same elaborate scale. About 80,000 cyclamen and 40,000 primulas are raised annually, the bulk of them planted out in the beds and borders. There were some striking beds of lachenalias in flower. Several miles of terraces form a supply garden; in fact, this portion of the establishment is prodigious, and replete with a large and varied stock of plants. We were informed that the Casino gardens have a working staff of 200 men.

A walk around the palace of the Prince of Monaco concluded the day. It stands on a high promontory thrust out into the sea, and on the extreme point, which is covered with scrubby pines, were masses of red geraniums several feet high —in fact, a tangled, thick undergrowth to the pines, about the most curious association one could think of.

Vintigmilia,

the first town in Italy, was the next stopping place, and La Mortola, the garden of Mr. Thomas Hanbury, our destination. This garden is a series of terraces on a steep hillside, and is full of rare and beautiful plants. Especially noteworthy were some gigantic plants of Agave Salmiana, foucroyas, opuntias, banksias, pittosporums and others previously noted elsewhere. The drive to and from the place was most interesting, as we saw miles of terraces, many of them only wide enough to accommodate a row of grapevines or a single row of peas, which were then in blossom. Some of the terrace walls here were veiled in ivy-leaved geraniums, which, planted at the top, had grown down, completely hiding the wall, and gay with a profusion of bloom.

Continuing along the coast through olive groves, lemon orchards and fruit gardens carved out of the mountain side, looking like gigantic flights of steps, we reached Genoa, and here all of horticultural interest ceased.

Morris, Ill.—Mr. A. Mitting, of the Morris Floral Co., has returned from a three days' visit to California.

DESIRABLE PERENNIALS.

The rapidly growing interest in the cultivation of hardy plants and shrubs as shown by repeated and eager inquiries of what to plant and where to obtain the material, makes it evident that any facts concerning "perennial border" plants must be useful to florists and dealers as well as to their patrons.

If you will look over the catalogue of any dealer in hardy plants you will find a large number of species enumerated which can be of no use or interest outside of a botanical garden. The uninitiated purchaser who buys them on the strength (or length) of their inviting names will meet only vexation and disappointment. Other species, valuable under suitable conditions, may have certain peculiarities of growth or habit which will render them an unmitigated nuisance to the cultivator of limited space. For instance, certain of our native asters and golden rods have a capacity for spreading by the roots which involves a great amount of labor to restrain them within proper bounds in a small garden.

Plants which grow too readily from seed are also to be regarded with caution, as they may in time menace the existence of their less prolific neighbors. Many dealers and collectors are advertising and sending out plants of dangerously poisonous properties without warning to purchasers and grave results sometimes follow. Cases of poisoning have been reported from children eating the seeds of the purple thorn-apple (Datura Tatula). Aconite and foxglove are frequently cultivated as ornamental plants without a suspicion of their poisonous character. The common oleander (Nerium Oleander) is highly poisonous, even its fumes being deleterious to some persons.

The rapid extinction of some of our choicest native plants because of the breaking up of the prairies and the close pasturage of the woodlands makes it desirable to save them if possible by cultivation in perennial borders and elsewhere.

Clematis: The common Virgin's Bower (C. virginiana) and the Leather Flower (C. viorna) are two pretty vines native through this state. C. virginiana has showy panicles of small white fragrant flowers.

Aquilegia: The Red Columbine (A. canadensis) is one of our most graceful native plants in form, color and foliage on banks and bluffs.

Thalictrum: The Meadow Rues (T. polygamum and T. dioicum) deserve a place in any wild border on account of their beautiful foliage. T. polygamum will grow four to six feet high, while T. dioicum is as graceful as a fern.

Menispermum: The Moon Seed vine is a pretty woody climber with rich angled leaves and purple grape-like berries. The root has a medicinal tonic principle.

Podophyllum peltatum: The May-Apple is a pretty, easily grown perennial, especially fine among trees or shrubbery.

Sanguinaria Canadensis: The Blood Root with its large rich leaves and beautiful white flowers graces rich woods in early spring. Blended with trilliums, hepaticas and dicentras it can be made one of the choicest ornaments of the border.

Hibiscus militaris, a bold, strong growing hibiscus with large rose-colored flowers; a close second to H. californicus.

Geranium maculatum, the wild Crane's Bill, makes rich bunches of foliage and flowers when cultivated. All plants of this order are handsome, but the other native species are too straggling in growth to be effective. The erodiums have the same fault.

Silene stellata, the starry Campion, forms dense bunches of tall stems, with whorled leaves and finely fringed white flowers.

Ceanothus Americanus: This little member of the Buckthorn order is popularly called "Red Root" and "New Jersey Tea." From its massive woody roots a cluster of leafy stems crowned by rich masses of delicately beautiful white flowers spring up each year. The root has sometimes reached sufficient size to be cut into veneers when it rivals rosewood in beauty.

Amorpha fruticosa, a tall shrub with the aspect of a caragana and with spikes of purple flowers marked with golden stamens.

Amorpha canescens: Lead plant, and locally called shoe-string, is a pretty little prairie shrub or half woody plant. The spikes of gold and purple are beautiful.

Tephrosia virginica, Goat's Rue, is a beautiful plant for dry, sandy locations.

Cassia marilandica (American Senna) is a fine plant forming close masses of acacia-leaved stems three to five feet high with showy yellow flowers at the top.

Many of our native composite flowers are worth cultivation for the boldness which they lend to the outlook. I will name only a few of the most desirable:

Vernonia fasciulata, Iron Weed, is a coarse plant, but has showy, dark purple masses of flowers, usually three to five feet high here. It has one drawback, the matured heads turn a dusty brown and are lifted into undue prominence by the lengthening of the pedicels.

Eupatorium: The eupatoriums are quite effective in a mixed border. The Boneset (E. perfoliatum), white Snake Root (E. ageratoides) and the Joe-Pye weed (E. purpureum) are well-known wild flowers. They are easily transplanted, keep their place well and are free from bad habits.

Liatris: The leading species of liatris should be present wherever there is any space left for wild flowers. They are the most characteristic feature of our Illinois prairies and woodland openings. The compact shape of the tubers makes them easy to transplant and there can be nothing more showy. L. cylindracea, L. pyenostachya, L. scariosa and L. spicata are the best for this locality.

Solidago: The Golden Rods as a body are so well known that it might seem needless to say anything in their favor, however they vary greatly in availability. The species which are of robust growth and prone to spread rapidly by root runners as S. canadensis, S. serotina and S. missouriensis, are likely to prove troublesome where space is limited. S. caesea, S. latifolia, S. speciosa, S. namoralis, are very pretty forms of smaller growth which remain where they are planted. S. rigida and S. Riddellii are somewhat larger (two to three feet), with larger heads of fragrant showy flowers. S. patula is a fine bold plant (six to eight feet), for very moist locations. The Golden Rod is one of the many flowers acensed of being the cause of hay fever, but the evidence is not conclusive. John Higgins.

CARNATION CRESSBROOK.

This new pink carnation originated with Mr. Chatterton Warburton, of Fall River, Mass., and the blooms shown at the Baltimore convention of the American Carnation Society were certainly fine. It was scored 94 points by the judges, which is 9 points more than the number required to secure a certificate. The blooms are a very pretty shade of pink, well formed and borne on long, stout stems. We were very favorably impressed with it. Since the convention the variety has scored another 94 points, this time at the Boston Flower Growers' Exhibition on March 9th.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business is in fair shape when you consider that it is the end of April. Quaker's ladies, crocuses and snowdrops are in full bloom outdoors. Next week will be May.

The plantsmen hardly did as well as usual with leftover and belated Easter stock. The stores had more than usual to begin with: the azaleas were all too ripe to keep, and lilies very plentiful. Most of the stock has been cleared up somehow and its place is being filled by the next crop. The more up-to-date the place, the quicker the benches are cleared and refilled, for time and space mean money.

While business is fair for this season there are entirely too many flowers on the market. Carnations hold up fairly well, but second-class—well, in fact, all second-class stuff is in oversupply. The street men help to dispose of the stock, but the rainy weather has been against them. Lilies continue abundant and can be had at any price. Large white and yellow daisies sell fairly well at $1.50 per 100; also white sweet peas at same price; Blanche Ferry goes slowly at $1 per 100. Smilax and asparagus continue in fairly good demand.

Various Items.

William K. Harris, who was taken ill on Easter Monday, is happily recovering.

Hugh Graham had some first quality hyacinths that sold readily for 15 cents each in 4-inch pots. This grade, by the way, nearly all goes to Germany, where the bulbs bring fancy prices, about $6 per 100; whereas in this country $3 to $4.50 is about the highest price obtainable.

John Curwen, Jr., formerly of Villa Nova, has leased 15,000 feet of glass at Glen Head, Long Island. Mr. Curwen has done well with carnations and violets.

Secretary Rust has a band of able, hard working growers who are pushing the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society along in good shape. The April meeting brought out sharp competition for the prizes offered. Cultural papers were read by experts and keen interest was manifested.

It is the fashion among our horticultural writers to make disparaging remarks about the foreign salesmen who visit this country each spring. Probably this is due chiefly to regret that we are unable to supply our own wants in plants and bulbs. Until we can do this we owe a debt of gratitude to the enterprise of these growers from abroad, who produce what our customers want and send their representatives to our doors to offer their products. This city has been known for some time as a good market by these travelers.

The business done here in palms has fallen away of late years; we do them well now ourselves, thanks to Dreer, Ball, Heacock and others. The importation of araucarias has increased; we have as yet no specialist in this field; there are also a great many Ficus elasticas still imported. The greatest increase is among the flowering plants, especially azaleas; these are so admirably and cheaply grown as to defy home competition.

The quantity of bulbs which we import each year is simply enormous. At present this branch of the business is barely holding its own, there being a slight increase in bedding and a distinct decrease in forcing of bulbs. The falling off in the quantity forced each season is due partly to diseases affecting Harrisii lilies, narcissus Von Sion, tulip La Reine and some varieties of Dutch hyacinths and partly to a change in taste, which has put these showy flowers on the back track.

Hugh Graham built a new palm house before Easter; to fill it he drew from outside, clearing up Edwin Lonsdale's available stock.

The retailers doing outside planting have used their Crimson Ramblers left over from Easter in this way, thus saving part at least of their investment. A very large number of pansies are seen about town in vases and window boxes. Boston ferns in small sizes are in demand both in and outside of this city.

John F. Sibson, who has charge of the McKean place, "Fernhill," Nicetown, has his houses in exceptionally nice condition. Beauties and carnations are in fine shape. Among carnations he thinks well of Olympia, Crocker and Flora Hill, but his best sort is the Marquis. The plants of this variety were field-grown, and when lifted were rather small. They have done finely all winter and are now large plants still in excellent condition.

BALTIMORE.

The Weather.

For the week ending today (April 22) we have a record of clouds and rain, a lower than normal temperature, but no heavy freshets or destructive winds, such as have devastated other sections. The copious precipitation has replenished the springs and water courses and put a period to the most prolonged winter drouth that has been experienced here since any weather memoranda have been kept. The ground will now be in most favorable condition for working and all out-of-door operations, which are behind-hand now, will go ahead with vigor. The bloom of hardy shrubs which are now in season is profuse, the winter not having had any injurious influence as in so many years.

The Market.

In the cut flower trade fairly active conditions prevail. There is a glut of callas and Harrisii lilies and more than sufficient roses coming in except good whites. Good Beauties are selling well. The supply of carnations is not much beyond the everyday requirements and they sell at prices which are a shade above the average at this particular season. Hyacinths, tulips and narcissus are overdone—especially the last, which come in great quantities from farther south, selling consequently at lower figures, and supplanting other flowers. Just now heavy shipments of poeticus are coming from near Richmond, Va.

There are some shippers in evidence now who do not use the market to any great extent while flowers are scarce. Their supplies and the hardy stuff from the South tend to overdo the capacity of the trade to take all up. But, as usual at this season of the year, good stuff is in request and any disappointment in the market is due to the excess of mediocre flowers and to the causes indicated above, not to any falling off in the customary healthy demand. R.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

Surely the general run of business has held up remarkably ever since Easter. There is now a good supply of everything coming in except possibly bulb material, which is getting out of season. But everything cleans up fairly well except Easter lilies, for which there is not enough call to use the coming crop. In my capacity as salesman I do not like to be asked about prices, but being a sort of "Lord High Everything Else" on a small scale, as a reliable reporter I must confess prices are not what salesmen like. It is not so much a question with them what prices were as whether goods were actually sold or not. A heavy buyer can expect to come to the city just now and boss both ends of a transaction between himself and any wholesale salesman. "The melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year."

Various Notes.

Before our long rain (seemingly the longest in history next to that of Queen Victoria's) signs of spring were few and scarce. But "wait till the clouds roll by," "when the mists have rolled in splendor from the beauty of the hills," and spring is here. The increase in the length of the day is very noticeable to one who is "up with the lark in the early morn"; the grass is smiling up at you, buds bursting, crocus blooming, and the robins are on hand to superintend the whole thing.

Boston's Public Garden is a busy place. The plan is to beat all former records. The trees are getting their annual discipline, the bulb goods are up and coming, and at the city greenhouses in preparation for coming displays in the different city parks are 20,000 rose bushes, 30,000 lilies, 6,000 rubbers, 1,000 magnolias, 1,000,000 pansies and a countless array of other plant life.

By courtesy of Mr. Sutherland I was admitted to the work rooms of the new Koral florist letter of which he is sole selling agent. The proprietor, Mr. Alden, who gives his wife full credit for the invention, tells me he was formerly foreman for the Boston Letter Co., until the possibilities of his wife's idea became impressed upon him. Therefore the new letter is strictly of Boston birth.

The peculiar silk of which the letters are made is first taken to a large paper cutter and cut into strips about three-fourths of an inch wide. These strips are run through a wringer-like machine a half dozen at a time, which scallops each edge with half circles an eighth of an inch across. A very simple sewing machine attachment folds as many of these scalloped strips as is desirable, lengthwise over a wire, sews them on solidly as fast as any one will run the machine, and turns out a finely finished product by the rod, resembling chenille, and used for the same purposes. Several pairs of deft hands are even now employed in bending this product into block and script letters and other floral designs, and the trade generally is learning the desirability of its lasting qualities on funeral designs after being placed in the cemetery.

A false prophet is false profit indeed, so we will cast no horoscopes, but even the largest business concerns inevitably have a small beginning, and "there is always room at the top."

N. F. McCarthy's auction rooms are overflowing with stock for sales on every Tuesday and Friday until July 1, with the exception of April 19, which was postponed one day on account of the holiday. He has issued a magnificent catalogue of hardy roses, rare evergreens, rhododendrons, trees, shrubs, etc., to be sold during the present month. It is finely illustrated and lists an immense amount of goods.

James Salter, from Mr. Zirngiebel's working force, has accepted a position on a private place at Manchester-by-the-Sea.

At the risk of being accused of dealing in ancient history I might say that after all the Easter clouds rolled by it could easily be seen that while it probably was as successful a season as ever was known here, still everyone would have done very much better under better weather conditions. The trade ran to flowering plants heavier than ever, especially to azaleas and other high-priced goods. Lilies seem to be getting too common for the best class of trade. J. S. Manter.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade reports have not been very encouraging the past week. There was plenty of stock in the market until the last day, Saturday, when roses all of a sudden became scarce; plenty of them were sold at job lot prices up to Saturday, when the price suddenly went up. There was very little retail business and it was only the outside shipping trade that helped the wholesalers to clean up some of the glut. Select Beauties have been scarce and have been selling as high as $3 and $4 per dozen. Other roses are fine and range from $4 to $6 per 100 for extra select. Mixed lots were quoted at $2 and $3 per 100.

Carnations have been more plentiful the past week than at any time this year, they being rather a glut at times. At this writing, though, they seem scarce, especially white, which are in great demand and sometimes bring the price of fancies. Price on general stock in large quantities is $1 and $1.50; fancies, from $2 to $3 per 100.

Violets are growing poorer and smaller. A great many are coming in; they stand at 20 and 30 cents per 100.

Bulb stock is slow; there is very little demand for it. Valley is about the only stock in this line that seems to sell; $2.50 and $3 per 100 is asked for it. Sweet peas are coming in fine now and seem to sell better; 75 cents to $1 is the price just now. Another week of them will make a great difference in the price. Southern lilac is coming in now, but is received in bad condition and hardly express charges are made out of it. There are no ferns in the market and the scarcity of greens still continues. Smilax is also scarce at 18 and 20 cents per string. A great many of the florists are compelled to use galax leaves for backing.

Notes.

Edward M. Tesson, father of Robert F. Tesson, of Ellison & Tesson, died last Wednesday at 6 o'clock of throat trouble. The funeral was held Thursday morning from St. Ann's Church and was well attended by the florists. The floral decorations were beautiful. The family have the sympathy of all the florists.

Poor Tom Carrell, who left St. Louis about two years ago to try to recover his eyesight, returned last week to attend the funeral of his wife. Hard luck has followed Tom for some time. He is stone blind and has no way of making a living and he is surely an object for charity.

Mrs. F. J. Fillmore has been sick in bed for some time, but from last reports is improving somewhat.

At Kuehn's the past week was seen that fine pink carnation Mrs. Nelson, sent out by E. A. Nelson, of Indianapolis, Ind. Nothing like it has ever been seen in St. Louis and we can safely say that it is the finest pink carnation yet. It has all the requirements, stem, calyx, color and keeping qualities. Mr. Nelson surely has a treasure. Mr. C. A. Kuehn will handle the stock for Mr. Nelson.

The weather has been very cool the last few days, which has had a depressing effect on the plant trade at Union market. The market is fairly alive with plants of all kinds, but very little business will be done in this line until the warm weather sets in for good.

Charles C. Connon, of Webster Grove, Mo., is a candidate for mayor of Webster. Mr. Connon's friends among the craft are confident of his success.

Mrs. H. G. Berning, who has been ill for the past two weeks, is reported somewhat better.

Bowling.

Eight members were present at the bowling club Monday night, and from the scores it will be seen that the rolling was poor. A few weeks of steady rolling will show a great improvement. The scores were as follows:

Kuehn	170	138	169	173	650	162½

Pan-American.

The Missouri commissioners to the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo are all in St. Louis making preparations for shipping the various exhibits to Buffalo.

Mr. P. M. Kiely, of our city, was appointed agent for St. Louis to furnish the Missouri exhibits at Buffalo with such fruits from this part of the state as may be needed from time to time.

The Missouri State Horticultural Society, which had charge of the state exhibits at the World's Fairs at Chicago and Omaha, is co-operating with the commission at Buffalo. J. J. B.

LARGE GLADIOLUS BULBS.

Among the many interesting items in your most excellent journal I have read with pleasure the articles on gladiolus. That "big" corm reported by Mr. Cowee made me feel like telling of my experience with another "big" one. Two years ago in a mixture bought from Crawford & Co., Cuyahoga Falls, I noticed a very large, coarse looking "bulb" of some three er more inches across. Planted that season, it threw up five grand spikes of flowers of a beautiful fleshy pink, of large size and good substance.

When I lifted it in fall it had increased seven-fold, each of the seven corms being two inches to three inches in diameter. One of these seven last year gave an immense spike of flowers, the lower two buds breaking into one flower, which in size made a mere microbe of anything in the Childsii or any other of the big things I have yet seen. Unfortunately it had been given to a neighbor, and I thus lost the opportunity of trying it out. E. J. L.

The Market.

Market conditions are rather better than last week, the supply having lessened and the demand increased somewhat. In fact, conditions are very satisfactory for the season, though ruling prices are hardly up to the same time last year. Though there is a good deal of stock in the market, there is none too many good roses to meet the shipping demand, and prices on this grade hold up to $5 and $6. From these rates prices shade down through the various qualities to $2 for the poorest. In Beauties the best bring $3 to $4 and from that down to 75 cents.

Carnations still hold their strong position and are $1.50 to $3 for good and occasionally some fancy sorts bring $4, while again Scotts have been sold at as low as $1.00. Lilies are plenty and are slow movers at from $4 to $6, with some sales of extra at $8 to $10. Tulips, etc., are slow, but are moving rather better than last week.

Club Meeting.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club last Friday evening the attendance was light, as the secretary had overlooked sending out the usual notices. But there was a quorum and some business was transacted. The transportation committee was instructed to issue a general invitation to the florists in Chicago and the west to participate in the trip to Buffalo next August and to endeavor to learn definitely how many would join the party, so the club would be in a position to get the very best possible terms and accommodations. The secretary was instructed to request Messrs. Hawkes, Swenson, Klehm and Kennicott to have their essays ready to read at the next meeting, to be held May 2. The subjects to be covered are hardy plants by the first two and paeonies by the last two.

Various Items.

Several of the down-town retailers have joined forces against the street men and as a result an ordinance was introduced at the meeting of the city council last Monday evening which, if passed, will no donbt keep the flower sellers off of the streets, as they will be "kept moving," and but little business can be done while "moving." The ordinance was referred to the judiciary committee, and as there is some little political influence backing it the street men may soon have an opportunity to take a vacation. But, of course, much depends upon whether counter influences are set at work or not.

If the ordinance goes through it will cut off an outlet for the second and third grade stock and may seriously affect returns from this stock. One commission house looked up their last Saturday's sales tickets to see what proportion of their sales were to street men and found that out of a total of $500 no less than $82 went to basket men and $50 to stand keepers, a total of $138 to street men. They say that but for the street men this stock would have gone to the dump.

The Poehlmann Bros. Company is now fully organized, with John Poehlmann, president; Adolph Poehlmann, vice president, and August Poehlmann, secretary and treasurer. The firm will soon build three houses 25x306 and a ban to 8x306.

Weiland & Risch are preparing to move into their larger quarters in the basement of the building they are now in and are having them fitted up in fine shape. They will then handle the out of two more large growers. They leave broken ground for the range of new houses at their place in Evanston.

E. C. Amling has absorbed the space formerly occupied by George Piepgras, and now occupies the entire floor.

A shipment of trailing arbutus has arrived at Kennicott's.

We have heard of no damage to florists by the storm on Sunday, though the wind was certainly strong enough to endanger weak houses.

At O. J. Friedman's last Saturday evening we noticed a very attractive table center piece arranged by Joe Curran. It was circular in form and filled with valley interspersed with cattleyas.

P. J. Hauswirth had a dinner decoration for a college fraternity last Friday evening, and the society's colors being yellow and lavender he used daffodils and violets throughout. The boutonnieres contained a single yellow narcissus and several violets, the latter being wired to keep them in position.

The daily papers are manifesting much interest in the fact that a "Century Plant" is about to bloom in the conservatory at Washington Park.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Easter trade was good with most of the stores, the only kicks being made by beginners; the old houses did the best business. The weather was splendid and cut flowers were plentiful with the exception of lilinms; they were very scarce, many stores only carrying a few dozen while some had none at all. Trade since Easter has been quiet at most stores and will perhaps remain so until our President McKinley visits us sometime in May. Stock is becoming very plentiful, outside roses are in abundance and prices are taking a downward turn.

Sweet peas have been in market the past two weeks and are splendid in quality.

Prices: Beauties, $1 to $2; Brides, Maids, Kaiserins, 25 to 50 cents; Meteors, 15 to 50 cents; Cecil Brunners,

10 cents; Perles, 10 to 25 cents; Carnots, 50 cents, Liberty, $1 per doz. Carnations: Crocker, 35 to 50 cents; mixed fancy, 25 to 50 cents; Hill, 20 to 25 cents; Scotts, 16¼ to 25 cents; Portias, 12½ to 20 cents per doz. Harrisii, $1 to $2.50; violets, 75 cents; sweet peas, $1.50 to $2.00; callas, 50 to $1 per 100; valley, 25 cents per doz.; asparagus, 10 cents; smilax, 5 cents.

Various Items.

Jacquemet has sold out his business to Dominie.

J. A. Nelson, a member of the firm of Morse & Nelson, Oakland, Cal., died on the 14th of March after a lingering illness. Mr. Nelson leaves a widow and one child to mourn his loss.

The California State Floral Society will hold its annual exhibition on May 16, 17 and 18, in the Ferry building, San Francisco. Exhibits are expected from all parts of the state and an effort will be made to hold a floral congress of the Pacific states during the week of the show.

C. Ferrari & Sons will erect six new houses for roses. Some fine Liberties are now being cut at this establishment.

C. Hasselbacher, Oakland, Cal., is marketing some extra fine buds of Papa Gontier roses of splendid color.

Thomas Sheppard, 13th street, Oakland, did a great shipping business for Easter.

C. C. Abrams, Western Nursery, sold out a batch of azaleas for Easter that might be classed the finest ever seen in San Francisco. They were well done. Sievers & Boland got the bulk of them.

Sievers & Boland made the finest display in San Francisco for Easter. Boxes of valley and tulips done up in crape paper in colors were fine; also the azaleas, two in a pot, red and white, made a handsome present.

Shanahan, Powell street, had a grand display of orchids, in variety, for Easter. They were arranged on a wire stand and never failed to draw admiring crowds to his window. And such rubbernecking at his vase of Hobarts! Buyers hardly knew which to choose, the orchids or the Hobarts. J. N.

NEW BOOKS.

Plums and Plum Culture. A Monograph of the Plums, cultivated and indigenous, in North America; with a complete account of their propagation, cultivation and utilization. By F. A. Waugh. Illustrated, 12mo, pp. 370; cloth. Orange Judd Company, New York. Price, $1.50.

Our American business of fruit growing has expanded tremendously in recent years, and with this expansion has necessarily come specialization. We have reached the stage of specialties and specialists in pomology. Plum culture is one of the most complicated of these specialties; and Professor Waugh is one of the best known of the specialists. The book is a complete monograph of the plums cultivated and indigenous in North America. It will be found indispensable to the scientist seeking the most recent and authoritative information concerning this group, to the nurseryman who wishes to handle his varieties accurately and intelligently, and to the cultivator who would like to grow plums successfully.

The New Rhubarb Culture. A complete Guide to Dark Forcing and Field Culture. How to prepare and use rhubarb. By J. E. Morse and G. Burnap Fiske. Illustrated. 136 pp., cloth. Orange Judd Company, New York. Price, postpaid, 50 cents.

The forcing of vegetables under glass during winter months has taken great strides within the past decade and grown to be a business of large proportions. One of the latest vegetables to receive attention in this line is the common pie-plant or rhubarb. Unlike most of the vegetables used for winter forcing, no expensive structures are required. Cheap board structures are put up and heated with an ordinary stove. In these, rhubarb roots are closely packed and then forced into growth. The resulting product is very handsome in appearance, quality and flavor. The best product is grown in absolute darkness. Mr. Morse, who is an expert gardener, gives in detail the commercial method of forcing, together with the actual cost, yield, and prices which have ruled for several seasons. In part second Mr. Fiske treats of other methods of forcing, as well as systems of outdoor cultivation.

LEGENDS OF THE LILY.

The lily is rich in folk lore and the sacred associations connected with it add not a little to its charm. It has been introduced into many religious ceremonies from the earliest time of the Hindoos and Persians. In the flower lore and legends of the Greeks, Romans and Huns, the lily plays an important part.

One version of the birth of the white lily is that the Virgin Mary, on her way to the temple, plucked a yellow lily growing by the roadside, which became pure white when she pressed it to her heart. "Madonna Flower," "Lily of the Virgin," and "Fleur de Marie," names for the white lily, have reference to this legend. It has always been the emblem of purity, and it figures in the pictures of the various saints who were famed for the purity of their lives, and in nearly all pictures of the angel Gabriel, who is frequently alluded to as the Angel of the Lily.

A German tradition points to the romantic Hartz mountains as the birthplace of the white lily. Another quaint German legend tells of the transition of the lily from white to red in the garden of Gethsemane.

The lily so largely grown for Easter originally came from China. An interesting tale regarding the departure of the lily from its native soil to Japan and later to other countries is as follows:

The Emperor Chow, who reigned over the flowery kingdom 1,000 years ago, was a cruel ruler. Indeed, he often resorted to the most barbarous cruelties for no other reason than to satisfy some passing whim or mood. Finally the closest adviser of the emperor, Li Chung, grew fearful of his life.

Li Chung had in guarded language delicately hinted upon a broader and more charitable treatment of the subjects, but of such reforms the Emperor Chow would have none, and the suggestion only angered him to still greater deeds of violence. Feeling assured that his efforts were fruitless, Minister Li Chung became concerned as to his personal safety and forthwith began to prepare a mode of escape.

He communicated to the emperor a message he had received from the gods in which a great sacrifice of men, women, beasts and fruits was demanded. This sacrifice was to take place upon a distant island and was to bring great prosperity to the nation. This appealed to the emperor's superstitions and bloodthirsty nature and Li Chung was given full authority to carry it into effect. He obtained the finest ship in the royal fleet. He selected a hundred of the strongest young men and most beautiful young women, beasts and fowls of the finest breeds, and for the feast all the delicacies the land afforded, among them the lily bulb "Bak-hap." Then he sailed away and that was the last the emperor ever saw of Li Chung. He sailed to what we know as Japan, and the men and women instead of being sacrificed inhabited and populated this beautiful island. Some of the lily bulbs were planted to reproduce their kind, and in this way the lily became common in the island.

TOMATOES UNDER GLASS.

Will someone kindly answer this through The Review? I have made raising hot house tomatoes a specialty for three years with the following success, the ground used being taken side by side from same place fresh every year.

The first year I used only fresh horse manure in preparing the soil and had strong, healthy plants, with no disease, that yielded about 11 lbs. tomatoes to plant for the season. The second year I used only cow manure with bone meal for top dressing and had some diseased plants; yield about 7½ lbs. tomatoes to plant for the season. The third year I used cow manure in preparing the soil, with cow manure for top dressing. Plants were diseased much earlier in the season with more diseased plants, leaves of plants becoming brown spotted, of a sickly color, stems brittle, breaking like glass; yield about 5 lbs. tomatoes to plant during season.

What manure would you advise me to use and what is the cause of the disease?

BUFFALO HOTELS.

The Buffalo Florists' Club have undertaken to arrange for the accommodation of all visitors who expect to attend the convention of the S. A. F. in Buffalo.

While it is true that hotel rates will be higher than usual, there are any number of apartment houses that have been fitted out for the accommodation of Pan-American visitors; also private houses in the residence portion of the city, where rooms can be had for $1 and up for each person, and in many breakfast will be served if desired, while other places will give all meals, the latter not so plentiful.

The hotel committee have a list of houses and hotels with the rates, and any person or persons wishing to engage rooms can have same secured in advance by addressing the chairman of the committee, W. A. Adams, 479 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y., stating whether they want accommodations at hotel, apartment or private house, with or without breakfast, and the number of persons desiring accommodations together. It will be necessary to inform the committee early, as they have the refusal of several apartments for the week, where from one hundred to one hundred and fifty can be accommodated in one place.

It will be unnecessary to communicate with W. J. Stewart, secretary of the S. A. F., as the executive committee look to the Buffalo Club to accommodate the visitors, which the hotel committee are willing to do, providing they are notified in time.

Street car facilities are excellent, the restaurants plentiful and rates reasonable. No one will be overcharged at any place, and with the above desirable apartments and private houses every one will be taken care of if they notify the committee in time.

Such weather as we have been having passeth understanding. A two weeks' record shows two sunshiny days, warm, snow, rain, cloudy and frozen. Two nights the temperature was as low as 16 degrees and one florist, Bruinslot & Sou had a leaky boiler.

Roses are plentiful and of good quality and the demand is equal to the supply of good stock. Carnations continue scarce, particularly white, which is hard to get in sufficient quantities to fill shipping orders. Bulb stock is about over, unless in lilies; Easter misses are coming in steadily.

The following is the history of 1,000 Harrisii bought as A1 stock to be forced for Christmas. Of the lot, 400 never came up; of the remaining 600, 300 flowered from Dec. 20 to Jan. 10, from one to four flowers each; 200 took their time from then till Easter and the remaining 100 will be on hand for next Christmas. Shall we grow some more?

James Schols has been confined to his bed with rheumatism for the past four weeks, unable to set his foot on the ground. In the meantime Mrs. Schols attends to the business and manages things in fine shape. Mr. Schols has the sympathy of the trade.

N. B. Stover of Granville reports a good Easter trade. He is rebuilding all his old houses into one range.

ERIE, PA.

During Friday evening and Saturday morning Erie was visited by the worst snow storm known in this section. The storm began in earnest Friday evening at about 8 o'clock and continued throughout the night and Saturday until about 3 in the afternoon. The wind blew from the northeast at an average velocity of about 30 miles an hour, attaining at times a speed of 30 to 40 miles.

The heavy, soft snow, driven before the gale, drifted roadways in many places to a depth of four feet, and was packed solidly against all exposed objects. Overhead wires soon grew to the size of cables, and under the weight of the heavy, clinging stuff, poles gave way and wires snapped by the dozens. Several horses were killed by having come in contact with live wires, and it was only by the merest chance that no person was killed.

Business was at a standstill; many of the stores closed at 3 o'clock on Saturday. Some of the local florists ran out of coal and were forced to burn wood, it being impossible to draw coal through the heavy drifts. In many cases the snow had to be shoveled from the houses to prevent their collapsing. The damage is widespread and we may be very grateful it did not occur Easter week.

"ERIE."

THE Chicago Tribune is offering liberal prizes for the best garden and best window box in the various divisions of the city this summer. Prizes are offered to the residents of the north, south and west sides, and in each case the first prize for best garden is $75 and the second prize is $25. For best window box, first prize is $15 and the second prize is $5. If these prizes are generally competed for, it will undoubtedly result in developing a lively interest in plants and flowers.

DALLAS, TEX.—The new houses to be built this season by the Texas Seed and Floral Co. will consist of three 150x35 for roses and two 150x14 for small shipping plants. The reason for putting in reservoir, tanks and pumping machinery is that city water is high here and money can be saved by having their own waterworks. The company has ten acres of American Beauty roses now in bud outside, and they are in fine shape.

OWATONNA, MINN.—L. P. Lord & Co. have succeeded Lord & Johnson, Mr. Johnson remaining as working foreman. The firm reports Easter trade as at least 35 per cent better than last year, with a notably increased call for decorative plants. They increased their capacity about 25 per cent last year, and hope to add another 25 per cent this year to keep up with the growing demand.

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.—Daniel E. Gorman will soon build a new house 50x100. Mr. Gorman is the florist against whom a novel suit was brought by a neighbor who complained that the reflection of the sun from the greenhouses made his residence less desirable. Mr. Gorman will now change the angle of the roof to 70 degrees, or build a small house in front of it.

AUBURN, IND.—Fleming & Haebich have dissolved partnership. The business will be continued by W. G. Haebich, who has purchased the greenhouses.

Plant of Nephrolepis Wittboldii.

"A Most Valuable Decorative Fern."

Philadelphia, Feb. 2, 1901.

The Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen: We are much pleased with the Nephrolepis Wittboldii; the specimen plant which you recently sent shows the character of the plant very nicely. Its bold heavy foliage, which is made to appear very light and graceful by the wavy edge, should make this a most valuable decorative fern, for which there is room alongside the Boston fern.

We see no reason why the plant should not become just as popular as this valuable variety.

Yours very truly,

The Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago.

Gentlemen: Please ship to me as soon as possible 300 more of your Nephrolepis Wittboldii.

The plants I received from you a short time ago are doing so nicely that the more I see of them the more I am convinced that Wittboldii is the Great Fern of the Future, and I feel I cannot get too heavy a stock.

And I know that every enterprising florist will purchase a stock of it as soon as he sees what a grand decorative plant it will make. Wishing you a prosperous New Year, I remain. Yours truly, A. J. BALDWIN.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

The volume of Easter business exceeded that of last year by a very satisfactory margin. The kind of weather which inclines to discourage the florist at such times and is most favorable to the umbrella man visited us on Monday and remained until Saturday morning, when the storm abated and business came our way with the force of a Texas "gusher," lasting up to Sunday noon. As stated in my last notes we were never better supplied with flowering plants, which were most in demand, the lily taking the lead, with sales nearly double those of a year ago. Of cut flowers there was plenty, showing 20 per cent increase in sales. Very few fancy baskets or novelties were used (they are not profitable here yet), but the single plant and pans of assorted stock found a ready sale.

Bulbous stock was "par excellence," and we doubt if there were any better displays in the country than those seen at the establishments of Samuel Murray and W. J. Barnes. Much credit is due these gentlemen, both for the quality of their stock and the satisfactory way in which it was handled.

Arthur Newell gave his store a spring cleaning and made every preparation for a big trade, and he was not disappointed. A shipment of fancy carnations from the Chicago Carnation Company he retailed at $2.50 per doz. Arthur is mourning the loss of his pet alligator, which departed this life in time to avoid the Easter rush.

W. L. Rock's new store was ready for occupancy and was well advertised. It required a force of ten hands at his two stores to handle his trade, some of them working all Saturday night at filling orders.

Our lady florists are all wearing new hats and a prosperous smile. Miss Dalley, Eleventh street, reports a large Easter trade, and says it could not have been better with her. Miss Dalley carries a fine grade of stock and believes in a generous window display. H. J. M.

THE GOOD & REESE CO.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Since Easter trade conditions have been in every way satisfactory. Roses have been in good demand at fair prices. Carnations are becoming more plentiful; the demand is still ahead of the supply.

The craft here are all ready to start planting out carnations just as soon as weather will permit. The number put into the field this year will exceed that of last year. The Van Bochove Bros. will this year bench a large quantity of last year's introductions, which they have been testing and found to be suitable to their soil. Ethel Crocker has proved with them to be one of the best, possessing a good constitution, exempt from stem rot and rust, a continuous bloomer and a good shipper. Lawson has quite come up to its recommendation, and will be given a good deal of bench room. Marquis is a grand flower, strong grower and healthy, but both here and at the Dunkley establishment it has proved lazy; they will try it again. Peru is with them one of the best whites, very prolific and a good keeper. Morning Glory also has done well, and will be planted largely in the place of Daybreak. Among the standard sorts Joost is exceptionally fine and has entirely displaced Scott.

The celery men are very active preparing the land for the early crops of Kalamazoo's famous product; a few fields have already been planted, but the cold of the past few days has killed them, and they will have to be reset. The hotbeds are filled with millions of young plants ready for setting in the open field as soon as weather permits.

Visitor, Mrs. Foster, Plainwell, Mich.

RIBES.

HARTFORD, CONN.

Easter trade averaged good considering the existing circumstances, it being the rainiest Easter week on record. Stock of all kinds was plentiful, excepting carnations and prices were about the same as last year. In the plant line azaleas and lilies were in most demand.

Carnations were very scarce and but few good ones could be had. Some very fine Brides and Maids were in the market and found ready sale. Violets were in abundance as were tulips, daffodils and mignonette. There was a noticeable increase in demand for plants over that of last year.

The receipts perhaps were a little ahead of last year and had the weather been more favorable the receipts would have been 25 or 35 per cent more. Most of the dealers had stock left over.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

John W. Spencer, of Cornell University, has finished his course of lectures which he has been giving in the public schools, under the management of the Woman's Union.

His talks were upon the subjects of flowers and gardening, and proved very interesting to his listeners. The Woman's Union will hold a flower show in the fall, similar to the one which was such a success last year, and it will probably be held some time in September. The children will raise the flowers at home, and valuable prizes will be awarded the successful competitors. The classes to which awards are to be made include the following:

1. For best cut flower display grown by any public school pupil. For the best display of vegetables grown by any public school pupil.

2. For best display, grown by pupil, of cut asters, coreopsis, morning glory, dianthus, marigolds, nasturtiums, petunias, phlox, bachelor buttons, vinnias.

3. For the best box or pot of plants raised from seed by a boy. For the best box or pot of plants grown from seed by a girl.

4. For the best display of cut flowers from a bed in school garden, planted and cared for by a grade.

5. For best aranged bouquet of cut flowers.

WATERVILLE, ME.—H. R. Mitchell & Son are building a house 21x110.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—J. Kessell is building two fern houses 17x125.

CLOVER SEED.

C. A. King & Co., Toledo, O., say under date of April 20:

"Season is almost over. It has been an interesting one. Prices have averaged higher than for several years. Stocks of old seed are very small and less than for several seasons. Receipts here have been small, only 70,000 bags against 146,000 last year and 200,000 from the enormous crop of 1897. Exports have been the smallest since 1896. High prices checked them. October means the new crop. The prices of that will fluctuate as the guesses vary upon how the new crop will turn out. It will not average as low as some recent years even if the crop should be a good one.

A NEW VARIETY.

There was a rare and beautiful exhibition in the city council Monday night, as those who cast their eyes over the radiant banks of roses and lilies avow. It seems impossible that those who saw and rejoiced in its glories should not feel moved still further to improve the annual exhibition hereafter by eliminating that rare American orchid, the species Ward Heeler of the genus Aldermanus, which at various places reared its bulbous head and prehensile stamens from among the other flowers.—Chicago Daily News.

WEST ANDOVER, MASS.—E. Flynn, formerly of Lawrence, has leased the Edwards greenhouses.

MADISON, N. J.—L. M. Noe is building a new house 20x211. Lyons & Blake are building two, one 10x150 and the other 18x150.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—H. E. Wilson has just completed a new greenhouse 30x400 connecting the old range with a brick store building 20x50 on Hudson Ave. The new house is an even span, iron frame structure, and is divided by glass partitions into three sections, two of which will be devoted to roses and one to palms. The store will be lighted by electricity and fitted up in thoroughly modern style. The additional greenhouse gives Mr. Wilson a total of 50,000 feet of glass. He has a down town store at 88 East Main St.

WE HAVE received from Messrs. L. Boehmer & Co., Yokohama, Japan, a copy of their wholesale catalogue of Japan bulbs, plants, trees, etc., for 1901-1902. It is freely illustrated by engravings by Japanese artists in color and is very attractive.

GREENSBURG, IND.—Hedges & Clark will build two houses this season.

ALBANY, N. Y.—W. C. King & Co. have purchased the business of Geo. H. Grey.

ST. MARY'S, PA.—The St. Mary's Green house Co. are adding two houses 17x100.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—The wife of Robert Cameron, of the Botanic Garden, died April 14, after a long illness.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.—E. Chamberlain has leased a store on Purchase street and will start in business for himself May 1. He was formerly with Wm. Pierce. The latter has turned his business over to his son, W. P. Pierce.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Wedding Decorations.

The innumerable forms of church floral decorations are sufficiently interesting for a longer series of articles, but we can only now deal with the most important points. The few rough sketches we present this week must be considered from a framework point of view; we hope to be able to again present them from a finished side. It must be remembered that a frame is but as a foundation, the superstructure depends on the artist.

One of the most difficult problems for the decorator is how to fasten a stand in the pews without defacing woodwork or obstructing the passageway. We have a stand which fits snugly in the corner of the pew; one screw eye in the floor holds it in place. Any of the stands shown can be put in the pew; a screw eye under the seat will make secure from tampering fingers or superfluous adipose. Don't use wire in fastening bunches of flowers on the end of pews; a stout rubber band or baby ribbon is best. It does not always require an immense amount of stuff to make an effective decoration; a plant or cluster of greens well placed and daintily finished is a pleasure to look at.

Now, in regard to house decorations, be it for the wedding or the reception, somewhat different rules apply. Color lines need not be so severe; that is, we mean more colors can be used in a house than in church, but in all cases the greatest harmony should prevail. You have different rooms in a house and each should be made a feature by distinct treatment and different color. Your greatest effort should be made in the ceremonial room. The banking of mirrors, unless you have extra fine material, had better be left alone; the custom is dying out any way. If you can untwist and train a Crimson Rambler or two on something similar to the wire shown it will show off better than all the stiff banks of greens you can manufacture. As mentioned, you can cut off the blooms and tie on any color desired. Golden Gate, De Watteville, Carnot, Bride or any of the light colors will be most acceptable roses in the principal room, and the next to it should be something brilliant, such as Liberty, Meteor, Brunner or Beauty, to emphasize color effects.

Spring flowers, such as tulips, daffodils, lilies, etc., can be made very attractive all in one room. A room fixed up in one or two colors in carnations is apt to be more admired than the roses. Combinations can be made, of course, with almost anything, but the arranger must not be color blind.

At extensive weddings in New York a colonnade of Greek or Roman pillars of plaster of paris or stucco are often used; the pillars are usually about 8 to 10 feet in height and 1 to 1½ feet in diameter. Roman garlands of roses, or preferably climbing roses, naturally entwining the pillars, make them very impressive. Ribbons are out of place on anything like this; delicate vines or garlands of flowers are the only fit embellishments of the classic pillars of the past. We don't wish to undervalue ribbon, but it does not belong on everything. There are beautiful forms of decorative work where ribbons form a principal part, that is on a background of, say, white or yellow bunting, with tracery of vines, immense heraldic or cupid bows and streamers of delicate pink ribbons, with here and there clusters of flowers to match, can be made to show up amazingly good. Combinations can be made to suit the exigencies of the case, or the imagination of the artist; some very good examples of this kind of decoration were done at McKinley's last inauguration, which we attended for the purpose of writing up for this department; a pressure of other matters, however, has prevented us from giving our impressions, but an affair like this is always valuable. We shall discuss it during dull times.

But again to wedding decorations. The use of flowering plants is most appropriately pleasing in the house, and you want to tell your customers the placing of them in vases in conspicuous places is apt to give the impression that they have always been there, and people desire to create this impression. The less artificial (we mean "rigidly fixed up" or too apparently fixed) your work looks all the better. A great mistake is made by even the best artists in having some of the best parts of their work too low down. It is certainly absolutely necessary that pots, etc., should be covered, that a group of plants should have a finished look; but we should remember that when a room gets jammed with people, as it does invariably, your decorations are lost if they are not above the heads of the people. Keep your best work where it can be seen at all times.

Remember, too, in a house there is less call for the spectacular. Some great paintings must be always viewed from a distance. Your work in large buildings must be on the same principle as the "impressionist" picture, but the work in the house must bear close range criticism only, therefore it must be of a more polished type.

We will deal exclusively with bouquets next week. In the meantime if you have any question to ask send it along. We very frequently hear from the introducers of novelties. The great trouble with growers is that they are satisfied to stick a half-dozen of their pets in a vase, get them photographed and have the picture put in with their adv. We would be pleased to assist in better presentations of deserving flowers or plants.

IVERA.

HELPS IN DECORATING.

We have roughly sketched a few wire frames and devices that are useful in arranging large decorations. These are made by Reed & Keller, of New York, whose address will be found in the advertising columns.

Figure 1 represents a very substantial arch made of bolted sheet iron. It is made so that when not in use it can be taken apart and stored in a small space. It is usually made ten to twelve feet high but can be extended. It is suitable for church, house or ball decorations and can be made the principal feature of even the most extensive job. With simple wire hooks growing plants can be suspended from any and every part. When covered with growing plants of Adiantum Farleyense and a vase or two of choice flowers it gives a magnificent effect.

Of course there are numerous ways of "making it up." One very effective way is to cover it entirely with climbing roses. It is merely a matter of price, material and "know how." A bell or set of bells can be suspended from the center. One thing about this arch is that there need be no fear of its falling over, and the shape is a matter of choice.

Figure 2 is a wreath canopy for a house wedding. The wreath is of the crescent shape, very wide frame and from four to six feet in diameter, the top of wreath inclining forward to form a canopy effect. There is a very large bow at the bottom of the wreath. The iron pipe stem is eight feet high with a heavy rest at the foot.

This design can be made up very handsomely. The wreath should be filled full with but one color rose, the bow of a contrasting color. Sometimes it is made of flowers on wire work but most often is of sash ribbon. Very bright colors are usually used in this design to most surely avoid funeral effects.

A very popular design now is the shell canopy. It is a wire frame in the shape of a sea shell on a pipe stand like the preceding. It "makes up" very effectively and is full of meaning.

Figure 3 is a very simple steel wire frame to insert in a pot of Crimson Rambler roses and fasten to a mirror. Hide the wires with the foliage and bend them to any shape desired. Cut off all the Rambler blooms and you can then attach several hundred roses among the foliage in green glasses of water. Avoid stiff or formal lines. Make it appear as if the roses were growing in profusion on that tree. Wire a few on the ends and have all the flowers face outward. This kind of wire frame can be used for arches, canopies or any kind of design. It permits the artist to copy the natural and that gives more pleasure than formal lines.

Figure 4 is a steel wire frame that will enable you to transform a corner or alcove in a room into a "bower of roses." Fasten at the floor and again at the top. One of these was recently covered with American Beauty roses. Just fasten them on as if they were growing, using short ones at the bottom and long ones at the top.

Figure 5 is a six to nine foot skeleton for a rose tree. The iron pipe is in two pieces and extensible, the upper length being held in position by the set screw when in use. The top is of steel wires and it can be made finely effective for avenue work. Smaller sizes are used for table work. The stem and wires are first covered with rose foliage, from

50 to 250 roses of one color being used on the wires. Any small leafless tree in a plant pot can be used instead of above for a frame.

Figure 6 shows a very handy stand to hold a flowering plant, fern, vase or arrangement of flowers to place in groups of plants or at ends of pews down the church. The iron pipe standard is six feet high with wire pot frame on top.

Figure 7 shows a fancy nickel plated counter stand to hold "shower" or other bouquets. It can be made taller or shorter by means of the socket and set screw.

CARNATION NOTES.

Diseased Carnations.

The plants sent for examination by L. U. showed two kinds of disease and both in a very advanced stage. The White Cloud plant was badly affected with bacteria and if the whole bench is as bad as the plant sent there is not much use of bothering with them any longer. Better burn the plants.

There are many ways in which this disease can be brought on, such as overwatering, over feeding and sometimes impoverished soil, or in fact anything that tends to weaken their constitution. Plants that are kept growing steadily are not likely to take the disease. When a plant shows this disease you may be sure there is something wrong in the treatment and if it is allowed to get a good hold on a plant it is hard to get rid of and seldom do the plants fully recover from it; they do not have the vitality necessary to allow them to make a good, strong growth.

Some varieties are more prone to take this disease than others and special care must be given to the watering and feeding of those varieties from the time the cuttings are put into the sand until the plants are through blooming eighteen months after. There is perhaps nothing better than an occasional dose of lime or soot during the blooming season. The lime keeps the soil sweet and soot is one of the best foliage foods we have.

Our experience with this disease has invariably been that the young stock apparently outgrows it and looks healthy and clean until the dark days of the following winter when it reappears unless extreme care is exercised by the grower. This is where selection of cuttings plays an important part. We never propagate from plants that show signs of this disease and if any of the young plants take it we dump them at once. To try to doctor up young plants of standard varieties is wasting time and money, because even if you do succeed in restoring them to health in a month or two you will be just that much behind those that were always healthy; and so at best you can only expect fair results.

The plant of Crane had on it a disease best known as "purple-joint," but as I have had no experience with this disease I can give no light on the subject of eradicating it. I have heard other growers say that the Bordeaux mixture and also the copper solution had proven effective in keeping it in check. Perhaps Mr. U. would do well to try one of these unless he is willing to do the best thing of all, which is to burn the affected stock and buy new stock from some one whose stock he knows to be clean and healthy.

There is no time to doctor young stock now, but get a new start at once and get the stock planted as soon as you can. If Mr. U. has any faith in the indoor culture this would give him an excellent opportunity to get the benches planted early. Jubilee, America and Mrs. Bradt certainly do better with us grown this way and no doubt there are others that would appreciate it as well.

Planting Out.

You should be in the midst of your planting now unless the weather has permitted you to finish before this date. In our section from April 20 to May 10 seems to be the very best time for planting carnations; the weather is usually mild between those dates and the young plants take hold quickly and get down to growing before the hot and dry days and nights of summer come along. This year we had a spell of fine mild weather from the 9th until the 18th of April, and many growers had a few thousand young carnations in the field when on the 18th a heavy snow storm came along and the thermometer stood about 30 degrees several nights in succession and not many degrees higher during the day. While this did no serious damage yet I am sure it did no good either and the young plants that are being planted now right after the cold spell will be much better off. But it is rather late and no time should be lost in getting them out.

Fig. 7.

Shade.

We have just put a very light shade on our cut bloom houses, as the sun has suddenly developed a good deal of strength and the red varieties will not bear it many days without losing their brilliancy and later on their size and freshness. Many of the pinks also lose that brightness which we all admire so much. I do not like to shade until it is really necessary, and then a very light shade is sufficient until the weather is quite hot. Plenty of air and water will help more to keep up the quality. A mulch of some loose material will help to keep them from drying out too much, but more care will be necessary in the watering.

Try to cut all your blooms in the morning before the sun is hot. They are fresher then than at any other time and the color is also better; if the open blooms are left on the plants through the day the sun takes the color out of them and gives them that washy appearance.

A WEDDING BOUQUET.

We present herewith an engraving from a snap-shot photograph of a wedding bouquet arranged by Mr. Luis Russell, of the firm of W. & L. Russell, Victoria, B. C. The carnations used in the bouquet are Flora Hill.

This firm grows carnations very successfully, including Lawson, Marquis, Bradt, America, Flora Hill, etc. Their Lawsons have measured from 3 to 4 inches across all this last winter.

"WHERE ARE WE AT?"

[Paper read at the April 25 meeting of the Tarrytown (N. Y.) Horticultural Society by Mr. John Shore, of Harrison, a member of the Portchester Horticultural Society.]

As I learn from reports in the horticultural journals describing your meetings, the subjects on which you have had some very instructive essays I would infer that you are a society of specialists. I am not in the class of specialists but an ordinary practitioner. I have a wider scope than the specialists and wish to take advantage of that scope this evening.

I will begin by asking you a question: "Where are we at?" Are we as gardeners on the ascendancy or degeneracy? Now we hear very little of gardening nomenclature, but carnations, roses, violets, chrysanthemums and a few other specialties; then the principal feature of everything would seem to be size, the larger the better. I will here step aside to thank the originators for their skill and labor which has made it possible for us to enjoy their beautiful creations.

There is very little to distinguish the private gardeners' products from the commercial florists' products, except quality, which is in favor of the florist, owing to modern improvements and better facilities. When we meet together let it not be for character analysis, not for humdrum, but for facts as they present themselves from time to time. There is one fact that presents it-elf in a forcible manner to me. From the first year of the chrysanthemum rage numerous plants that you could have found in private collections previous to the advent of the chrysanthemum have now entirely disappeared, so much so that it is only a question of time when we must awaken to the fact how little we know of plant nomenclature.

Some citizens have awakened to the fact that a number of the animals of the United States are becoming extinct and to save such have secured reservations for their protection and perpetuancy. I am pleased to know there is also a reservation now established in Bronx Park where we may again become familiar with plants we once knew but have forgotten and also with plants of recent introduction.

There is also another fact that presents itself, namely, that the most instructive feature of our society meetings is the question box and the discussion on exhibits. But have the nature of our exhibits been such that what we may designate as insignificant may have their place. On these two features depend the enlargement of our knowledge as individuals, they alone can keep up the interest that will draw the members to the meetings.

In conclusion I congratulate the members of the Tarrytown Society in that they are wide awake in the interests of their society, in that they have contemplated invitations to members of other Gardeners' Societies, though there is enough latent talent it the fire is once kindled that would supply an inexhaustible source of information.

A HOT CORNER.

I have a hot corner enclosed on the north by the walls of the main house and on the east by a wing of it. This corner has a south and southwest exposure and is an excellent place to grow material requiring heat and shelter from strong winds.

Moonflower vines are used to cover the walls, the plants being well started under glass before planting time in order to have them long enough to reach above (or nearly to) the plants placed in front of them when set out. Passiflora Pfordti is also used as a wall cover and is the freest bloomer among the passifloras I know of.

Next to the vines at the back I use Hibiscus rosea sinensis and tall standard abutilons, standard lemon verbenas and lantanas, finishing towards the front with bush forms of abutilons, lantanas, heliotropes and crotons. Geraniums, ageratums and verbenas may be used to finish the front.

All of these plants have been started under heat and in bloom, or nearly so, by June 10 to 15, which is as early as they may be put out here with safety. Frequent drenching with the hose destroys any tendency to red spider.

TOMATOES UNDER GLASS.

Replying to the inquiry of B. K. Hedrick in the last issue of the REVIEW would say: Your correspondent's trouble with disease or his tomato plants is a serious one. I have heard it claimed, and apparently with good reason, that once disease appears in a house of tomatoes, the spores will remain in the house and the trouble will get worse with each succeeding year until finally profitable tomato growing is out of the question.

It is claimed that the form of disease called Cladisporium is hereditary, and plants raised from tainted stock will reproduce the disease. I have noticed the disease always appears in the fall when we may have a few days of damp, close, muggy weather. The only thing to do is to keep a dry moving atmosphere and also keep your plants dry at the root during such weather.

There is little doubt in my mind that cow manure used in excess helps on the disease by inducing a soft, sappy growth, which is liable to take anything that comes along. If I could get good rotted sod I would start my plants in it without the addition of any manure whatever. In such a soil the plants would make a firm, short jointed growth, and when you have a good set of fruit, feed your plants. I prefer to use bone meal as a top dressing and liquid manure made from either cow or sheep manure.

With the best of looking after and every precaution taken it is well nigh impossible to grow a crop of tomatoes under glass from start to finish without getting some one or other of the numerous leaf diseases, not to mention stem rot, club foot, or eel worm.

With the competition from Havana and all the southern states the days of profitable winter culture of tomatoes under glass seems about over.

C. TOTTY.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Don't Let Your Fires out.

I don't know of any more valuable hint that I can give the average florist just now than to be sure and not let your fires out. Many a hundred dollars has been lost by a shortsighted intention of saving a few dollars in fuel. There was a time when we thought we could get along without artificial heat after the first of May. For a good many years of late we have been firing till the end of May.

When I say this it is with the idea that you have a general variety of stock in one house, and there are exceptions to this. For instance, carnation houses need no fire; all they want is plenty of ventilation. If you had a house entirely devoted to zonal geraniums and there was no shade on it you could get along without fire as long as the weather was bright and plenty of air. But a whole house of one thing is the great exception with those engaged in growing bedding plants.

With shade on, which many will have applied at this date, the tropical plants which we grow so largely for our outside decoration will just stand still, and a little worse than that. The Cannas, caladiums, above all coleus, and our heliotrope, fuchsias, in fact, about everything, will suffer much. So keep up your fires and ventilate freely.

Cyclamen.

This is the time that our houses are rather more congested than any other in the whole year, and it is also a time when plants intended for next winter's crop are likely to be neglected. The most careful and industrious one will do it. Do not neglect your young cyclamens, which should now be in 3-inch pots. If you shift them soon into 4-inch use at least one-third of good decayed leaf mold.

It is early yet to put them in a hotbed and they do not want much shade. A light bench is best for two or three weeks longer, and it will be of great benefit to them to have the pots plunged in some material; coal ashes will do, but refuse hops is better, or even chopped-up tobacco stems, for it will keep down the aphis. An attack of greenfly is most injurious and almost ruination to them, and what is quite as bad is to let them get killing dry while they are in active growth. Smoke often and syringe every fine morning.

Chrysanthemums.

May is the month when we propagate the main crop of chrysanthemums. In addition to the cuttings from the old plants you can take the tops off the earlier rooted cuttings. They break quickly and you get three or four shoots and many of us grow them that way. The propagating bed is now cool, but these cuttings don't need heat. All they want is shading from the bright sun, and if your sand is coarse a copious watering twice a day.

Azaleas.

Azaleas that you cut back after Easter should be in a light, warm house and be kept well syringed. Some of the eastern growers do not believe in cutting these azaleas back so hard as we used to, but leave them about as they flowered, only be sure and pick off the flowers. I would say that if an azalea was in a good, healthy state there would be no need of trimming them back very much and they make all the more graceful plants. But if the plant is in poor health through a drying out or neglect then a severe cutting back will give the best results. And for several years the best Easter plants we have had have been those we have carried over.

While speaking of azaleas I made an erroneous statement last fall and own up to it. I said that the summered over plants being established would force better than those arriving from Europe. You would think that would be the case, but it is just the reverse. The newly imported plants are much easier to bring into flower.

Hydrangeas.

Don't neglect to shift your young spring struck hydrangeas. Give them a 4-inch and keep them under glass till the first of June. Those for early forcing are best grown in pots plunged out in the broad sun and given plenty of daylight between them. Those for later flowering can be planted out in some good, rich soil, from which they will lift with all their roots.

Smilax.

If you are going to renew your smilax bed this is about the time that the little plants should go into a 3-inch pot and be given a decent light bench, not necessarily the best bench, but not under the bench. A good, strong plant at the beginning of July means one extra string for the next year. William Scott.

HEATING.

What is the best system for heating three houses, each 18x75, in a locality where the outside temperature goes as low as 35 degrees below zero and the inside temperature should be from 55 to 60 degrees? How many pipes would it require and of what size? H. C. G.

For the heating of the three greenhouses as described by H. C. G. I would advise a steam system, the steam to be furnished from a wrought iron tubular boiler of about twenty horse power placed below the floor level of green houses, and an arrangement of heating pipes which would be partly over and partly under the benches in the several houses, proportioning the pipes at about one foot of heating surface to every four feet of glass. If your correspondent will send a rough sketch showing the arrangement of benches he intends to use, the heights of side of houses, and how much of them is glass, also whether the houses are connected or separate, I would be pleased to furnish you with a diagram showing the best arrangement of pipes.

New York. HENRY W. GIBBONS.

HARDY PLANTS.

The constantly expanding demand for hardy plants has brought to many florists orders that they find it difficult to execute in a satisfactory manner, and several inquiries that have recently reached the editor of the Review indicate a rather widespread desire among members of the craft for information that will be really helpful to them.

As one correspondent puts it: "Nearly all the plans I have seen published are for an acre or more of ground, and when I get an order to embellish the grounds around an average city residence with hardy plants I have nothing but my own very limited experience to help me. Can hardy plants be used in a satisfactory manner on the average city lot, and, if so, how? If practicable, I wish the Review would give us a variety of plans suitable for different aspects. We have frequent orders to plant a corner with hardy plants. Please give us a few examples."

In response to this and other requests we have arranged for a series of such plans from Mr. John Higgins, who is in charge of the hardy plants at Lincoln Park, Chicago, and present the first of the series in this issue. At our request Mr. Higgins has made this first plan for as small an area as the florist would probably ever be called upon to plant, making the planting as full and rich as possible on the limited space. These plans are of an existing place, and to fully carry out the idea the place will be planted in accordance with these plans, and we will, therefore, be later in the season able to publish a picture showing the effect produced and at what cost in material and labor.

It will be noticed that native ferns are used in one corner of the front plat, and the reason for this is that the steps of the house adjoining at the south shade this corner. In the street there are several large elm trees that shade the front plat from 2 to 4 p. m., after which hour the sun reaches it somewhat under the trees. The house shades the plat till toward noon. The entrance to the front door of the house is at the north side of the plat and is not shown in the plan. What does appear is a curve in the walk and the steps leading down to the basement door. It will be noticed that a spirea is placed here to partially screen this door. The plat is separated from the street and adjoining plats by a low iron picket fence.

In the rear plat all except the bed lying along the south fence is exposed to the morning sun and part of it has some of the afternoon sun. At the east is an alley and the plat is surrounded by a 5-foot close board fence. Along the south fence the earth is shaded all day long.

Beautify Your Homes.

The aesthetic crusade now being exploited in the city press is very laudable, but the movement to be effective should, like charity, begin at home. The small front yards and back yards of city residences are a far more important factor in the grand aggregate of beauty than the parks and pleasure grounds. There is a very extensive class of householders who, while their frontage is only the width of a city lot or two—not enough to warrant the intervention of a landscape architect—may have yearnings for the beautiful quite as pronounced as their more expansive brethren of the boulevards.

Here is a hint of what may be done in making dooryard areas presentable, using chiefly hardy perennials, because they can endure the conditions to be met in such places in a more satisfactory manner than tender plants.

The plants enumerated will need little or no protection in winter. Species likely to be troubled by insect pests or disease or having objectionable habits of spreading by seed or runners have been excluded. In the plans it will be seen that the arrangement preserves as much as possible of the space for grass. Utility as well as artistic considerations favors this arrangement.

A few points in regard to the treatment of plants in transplanting may not be amiss. First—Never allow the roots of plants to become dry by exposure. Plants in leaf should be shielded from the light after transplanting for a couple of days or until the rootlets resume their action. By observing these precautions plants can be safely transplanted any time.

JOHN HIGGINS.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

The trade will find much of interest in the growing movement of which the National League of Improvement Associations with headquarters in this city is the organized exponent. An important phase of the league's work is the linking of special opportunities with those who have business or other reasons for meeting them.

This month the league is pushing the school garden idea as carried out by the Home Gardening Association of Cleveland. One hundred thousand penny packages of seeds have recently been sold in the public schools of that city. The first season's efforts resulted in the disposal of fifty thousand packages of nine varieties of the more easily grown annuals. The suggestion is offered florists that they secure the co-operation of some local improvement association or other organized body, so as to interest the school children of their town in a similar movement. The National League is prepared to suggest the few necessary details and to co-operate toward bringing the matter to a head. If the local promoters will secure the aid of the local newspapers, attractive "copy" will be supplied from headquarters.

A little time given to a careful campaign along these lines ought to result in a local boom in the trade, and the energetic man who takes up the idea is sure to find himself one of the best known individuals in the community. By suggesting and stimulating flower shows in different schools and churches the interest will be maintained throughout the season. If a leading local photographer can be interested in the scheme, his promise to reproduce some of the most attractive displays will be an added element of interest. Altogether the scheme presents much of value to the man who desires publicity of a favorable character.

Another idea being pushed from the Springfield headquarters is the general awarding of prizes for the various vine and flower displays in front and back yards. Andrew Carnegie, John H. Patterson and other well known people have approved of the scheme by the provision of prizes in several localities. Florists can arrange the plan so that some local organization or a group of business men may provide a reasonable number of prizes to be awarded by a committee of local judges.

This plan may be elaborated according to the interest and resources of the one who is pushing the promotion. At Dayton, Ohio, the prize list has included the best appearing front and back yards, window and porch boxes, vine planting, vacant lots, and the best care of premises adjoining any of the steam railroads leading into the city. The plan directly interests a considerable portion of the community, and indirectly leads to newspaper agitation, so that the florists may reap a rich harvest of public appreciation.

2	Ricinus	9	Hemerocallis Sieboldii

		14	Lilium tigrinum
		15	Tradescantia virginica
		16	Uvularia grandiflora
		17	Hemerocallis Kwanso
		18	Menispermum canadense

The final effect should be much better than that secured by some chance or excursion scheme which cannot appeal to the better classes in the community.

The National League of Improvement Associations offers to respond to all inquiries and to supply any needed details in carrying out either of these two plans.

EVART GRANT.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Last Sunday we were shifted from late winter into midsummer, and midsummer weather conditions continue to prevail at this writing. As a result the quality of all stock has deteriorated rapidly and the proportion of best grade in a consignment of roses has been very materially reduced. Though prices on first quality shipping roses are still held up to $4 to $6, the great bulk of the receipts is sold at much lower figures, and some very fair stock is sold at $3, while a good deal of it goes at $2 and the poorest in job lots at $1 and $1.50. And even with the greatest care in selection of shipping stock it seems difficult to give uniform satisfaction, as the weather is very hard on the stock after it is packed.

Carnations have suffered with the roses. While quotations range from $1.50 to $3, the great bulk, and good flowers, too, sell at $2, while medium grades go at $1.00 to $1.50, and the poorest are cleaned up at any old price, if at all. Sales at 50 cents a 100 are not very uncommon. Again some extra fine Lawsons and Red Bradts bring as high as $4.

Beauties are in good supply, but the proportion of firsts is getting smaller. The best still bring $3 a dozen, but the great bulk of the stock goes at much lower figures. We have heard of sales in thousand lots that are too sad to mention.

Liberty is gaining friends. Some really first-class blooms have been seen the last two months, and the best of the long-stemmed ones have brought prices equal to the best Beauties. Mr. Washburn, of Bassett & Washburn, says they get their extra long-stemmed blooms altogether from the grafted plants, and says it is unwise to attempt to grow it on its own roots. Mr. A. Spencer, in charge of Peter Reinberg's salesroom, says Liberty has demonstrated that there is a place for it. Though the proportion of first-class blooms is much smaller than desirable and it is nowhere near as free as Meteor, the blooms average good in price and the demand is brisk.

The lily situation is positively painful. The buyer can practically name his own price if he offers to clean up a lot. On lilies that must be selected and packed for shipment $4 to $6 is asked, and occasionally more for extra select, but a good many are jobbed off at most any price offered.

Sweet peas are arriving in very good shape. We noticed some extra good Blanche Ferry at Benthey's. These sell at $1. Cornflowers are expected soon at this place.

Trailing arbutus is arriving more freely. Kennicott Bros. Co. are receiving some large shipments and it is now offered at 10 cents a bunch.

Tulips and other bulb flowers are quiet—so quiet you can hear a pin drop. There is no more welcome visitor in the market than the buyer who wants a few thousand tulips, and he has a whole lot to say as to the basis upon which an exchange of tulips and cash shall be made.

This is the sort of weather when a little care will make an immense difference in the value of the cut. The grower who cuts his roses every hour or so and cools them at once in an ice-cooled room will have a much larger percentage of marketable blooms than the one who cuts them but twice a day and has only a cellar for a cooling room.

Various Items.

A regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held at the usual place tomorrow (Friday) evening. Several essays are due, and it promises to be a very interesting meeting.

Martin Peterson, who has been for some time with E. H. Hunt, will open a retail store on Division street, near Humboldt Park, in time for Decoration Day business.

Mrs. C. M. Dickinson started last Tuesday for Seattle, Wash., where she will enjoy a two-months' visit with her parents.

Bassett & Washburn have been very successful with their Beauties this year; in fact, they have never before done so well with this rose.

Robert W. Schenck has been appointed commissioner plenipotentiary and gardener extraordinary to the city pumping stations, of which there are ten, with grounds ranging in size from a handker chief up to an acre or so. He will plant these grounds and look after them, and if he runs short of water will know the reason why.

During his recent visit to the city Mr. M. F. Kyle reported business good in Kalamazoo and that his son "Billy," who is with Kennicott Bros. Co., gratified him exceedingly by making him a grandpa.

The hyacinth beds are now in gorgeous bloom at Lincoln Park and the tulips are showing color. The tulips grown on the Pacific coast seem to be several days in advance of the Holland grown bulbs. The hardy plants seem to have come through the winter generally in good shape. The forsythia is already in bloom and the daffodils will be in their glory in a day or so.

The bowling series has not yet been definitely arranged for. Another meeting is to be held this week.

BUFFALO.

The Weather.

This is a latitude of quick climatic changes. A little more than a week ago we were wading through a foot of wet snow and today we are basking in sunshine at a temperature of 75, with daffodils and hyacinths in all their glory, and the robin's heart is full of joy, for the worm gets out at the same time he does. The grass is green, the cow gives more cream, the mud is gone and all nature is glad. Even discontented man is happy and forgets the amount of work he has to perform.

The Exposition.

I am afraid the daily press spread abroad the impression that the Pan-American suffered a calamity through the storm. Nothing of the kind, except a few broken panes of glass and a few days' delay in work, and that just now is serious, as every moment is needed. I may as well report now that although there are spots here and there that are yet unfinished, the work and finishing up that has been done the past three weeks is amazing. All main roads are now covered with asphalt. Exhibits will be all in place by the end of the week. The landscape features are showing up grandly. The Music Garden with its 180 beds will soon be gorgeous with its thousands of spring flowers. On Saturday last every building and the tower was a blaze of electricity. The Goddess of Light holds her hand aloft 405 feet above the ground. She is 90 feet high, but does not look on her lofty perch bigger than Mrs. Nation—going in swimming. Now, gentle reader, to say that I have never seen such an electrical display would mean little, but those who know say that the world has never seen its equal or approaching it. But you are all going to see this fairy land, so I will say no more.

Business has been very good. Grumblers and pessimists who said that they could not see what benefit this great undertaking would be to Buffalo will be greatly deceived. All classes, from the laboring man through all grades of industry and business, are already feeling the great benefit from the increased work and the large number of visitors. Some days there have been flowers enough, but on many days there is not near enough to go round. The bedding plant and decorating business is also sure to be a big advance on any previous year, as all who pride themselves on their home, and this is particularly a city of detached residence homes, will want to fix up a little extra and many a good deal extra.

A Cute Little Thing.

My attention was called to a small paragraph in your Chicago contemporary which reads as follows:

> At Easter Scott had a branch store in one of the dry goods establishments, which is the first start in this direction. Buffalo so far has been free from the Greek and other cheap sellers.

Now the little man who wrote this cute little paragraph knows very well that four or five years ago there was a firm had a window and counter in a store right opposite his own and that was a ladies' cloak store where they drew teeth, cut corns, dressed hair and many other "kindred" businesses. Our department houses have not yet had a cut flower department simply because they don't think they could run it at a profit, but they have sold bulbs, seeds, rose bushes, palms, bedding plants and everything else but cut flowers, so I was not the first or even the third to avail myself of the opportunity of getting near the madding crowd at Easter time.

No, it was not for information that Mr. A. penned this; it was just a little unkind cut and comes with very poor grace, all things considered. If a patrolman had died that day I would have been spared, for Mr. A. would have seen an order ahead and felt kindly to all. You must not think, my friends, when you read the Buffalo notes in the Am. Florist, that you are getting all the glorious literature that Mr. Adams has written for you. He writes spontaneously and voluminously and works in original jokes and brilliant witticisms, but, alas! the profound and metaphysical brain that wields the blue pencil in

House of Mrs. Thos. W. Lawson Carnations at the Establishment of the Originator, Mr. Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.

Dearborn street cannot appreciate these jokes and cuts and slashes them unmercifully. S'a, unfortunately, we get but the skeleton of these brilliant articles. What a pity that this editor did not see the spleen and narrowness and misinformation contained in the article in question. Alas, I am afraid that a dirty little insinuation is more to his liking than a harmless joke. Here was a chance to use his pencil, but instead of that it doubtless touched a sympathetic chord. Poor creatures!

The Department Store.

Our New York contemporary very kindly and sensibly comments on the subject, and more said on the same lines would be wearisome. The department store is a great big fact, an institution that evolved from present day conditions. Perhaps the greatest sufferers are the small stores of almost every kind on the outskirts of the cities. They feel it keenly, but what changes ever occurred, and even reforms, without some people suffering? As well talk and kick against the change of seasons.

I believe our business is hurt, or rather say affected, less by the large department stores than any one line, and doubtless if here and there an individual seems hurt by them others will be prospering by them. So fall in line and if you can make more money by having a counter in one of these large stores than renting a store to yourself, do it; if you don't some one else will. What a blessing if we all stooped no lower in our business transactions to one another than to exchange our produce for their value in money in a department store.

The Greek has not yet invaded us, and I believe that is merely because he has heard it is a slow town, and when he arrives he won't hurt any more than the public market, with its nominal rents. The "cheap sellers" we have had with us for many years; in fact, as long as human nature has been molded, and so we have had the cheap motives and cheap disposition and cheap pen, and why not? Without evil we should not enjoy the good. Without sorrow we should not know what joy is. And without stupidity we could not discern cleverness.

Visitors.

There has been an army of visitors of late, chief among whom was Harry Balley, Joseph Rolker, S. S. Skidelsky, Mr. Hageman and George Fancourt. "Dear Gange" looked fine you know. W. S.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The weather has been quite warm the past week, and has made cut flowers of all kinds more plentiful, and most of the stock is of excellent quality. The retail trade is not very brisk. With the exception of funeral work, which seems quite plentiful, and a few weddings and receptions, very little is doing.

Roses are generally good. Beauties are scarce; other roses, such as Brides, Maids, Meteors, Perles and Woottons, are selling from $2 to $3 per 100; extra select stock, $4 to $6, with plenty of them on hand for the demand.

Carnations are quite plentiful and still up in price; $2 and $3 per 100 is asked for the best, and a few are sold at $1.50. Some fine Marquis is in the market, which brings $3; Lawson, the same; White Cloud is the best white just now and is selling well.

Violets hold out well. Quite a lot of them are still coming in, but they are small and not of good color. They sell at 25 and 30 cents per 100. Sweet peas are much in demand and the quality is good; price, 50 cents to $1 per 100. Harrisiis and callas are very plentiful at 10 cents, or $1 per doz., $8 per 100. Greens are still scarce and only a few ferns are coming in. Smilax is selling at $15 per 100 strings.

A visit to Union Market Saturday found all hands busy. As the day was warm a great lot of stuff was unloaded. Sanders, Schray & Sons and C. Young & Sons Co. have the largest assortments, and should this fine weather continue, they will have their hands full from now on.

A visit the same day among the seedmen found them all very busy. At Plant's, Dickman's and Schisler-Corneli's they say the business was never better than now.

Notes.

The Riessen Floral Company furnished the decorations for the World's Fair banquet last Tuesday night at the Planter's hotel. Mrs. Riessen says that 300 American Beauties, 10,000 carnations, 2,000 mixed roses and four vans of palms and other plants were used. The banquet was one of the largest ever held in the city and was very elaborate. Great credit is due the Riessens for the manner in which they handled the affair.

Max Herzog and wife will leave for Europe early in June to be gone about two months. Max will give the club the benefit of a report of his travels in a paper on what he saw of our business while abroad.

W. A. Chalfant, of Springfield, Mo., was a visitor the past week. Mr. Chalfant says that business is tip-top in Springfield. Mr. Block, of the Cincinnati Cut Flower Company, was also a visitor for a few days calling on his many friends.

August Schuerman, of the Schuerman Floral Company, has gone to Peoria, Ill., to make large and extensive decorations for the May Music Festival and G. A. R. state encampment on May 6th to 16th. This is the largest decoration Mr. Schuerman has ever undertaken.

The race for the appointment of park commissioners and superintendent of public parks is quite interesting and the following are in the race: C. C. Sanders, Theo. Klockenkemper, Alex. Waldbart, Andy Meyer, Jr., and J. J. Beneke. The rule is, "none but Democrats need apply," so let the best man win.

Club Meeting.

The next meeting of the club will be held Thursday, May 9, at 3 p. m. This will be the last meeting at which essays will be read, and Messrs. Carew Sanders, Carl Beyer, H. G. Berning, E. W. Guy, Max Herzog and R. J. Mohr are each booked for an essay.

A fine lot of sweet peas have also been promised for exhibition.

President Guy says that the members should turn out, as this will be the last indoor meeting for some time. It is the club's intention to hold its meetings during the summer at the homes of its members. The first of these meetings will be held in June and the place will be selected at the next meeting of the club. At this meeting we will also hear the reports of the exhibition and the World's Fair committees. Some of the old faces which have not been seen at the meetings for some time would be welcomed.

Pan-American.

The Missouri commission of the Pan-American shipped a carload of plants from Shaw's Garden to Buffalo last Wednesday; the plants were some of the finest in the garden. Messrs. Beall, Garow and Secretary Yost of the commission, departed Saturday for Buffalo, where they will begin active arrangements for the exhibition, and all the departments of the commission expect to have everything in readiness for the opening.

In the agricultural exhibits there will be twenty-seven varieties of corn, twenty-one kinds of grasses and all the kinds of oats which the state produces. One hundred and forty-two barrels of exhibition apples have been taken out of cold storage and are now in Buffalo. Missouri will be represented in the divisions of agriculture, horticulture, mines and mining, forestry and dairy. Your correspondent vouches that our friend William Scott will take the best of care of them.

Mr. A. A. Harper, of Pine Bluff, Ark., is in town calling on the trade. Mr. Harper says the REVIEW is the best advertising medium for the trade, a small ad sold him 8,000 moonvines in one week.

FREE SEED SCANDAL.

Weight has been given the allegations of irregularity in connection with the free distribution of seeds by distinct charges made by the Wholesale Seedsmen's League of the United States. The charges are made in a protest to the Department of Agriculture against payment for seeds furnished on the April contract. Four specific accusations are urged over the signature of the secretary, any one of which, if substantiated, should be sufficient to stop payment on the vouchers of the contractor.

The league, through its secretary, declares:

First—The specific varieties of seeds indicated in the printed specifications of the 27th of January, 1900, have not been supplied, but very common and very cheap sorts substituted, this giving the contractor great advantages.

Second—No varieties whatever are named on the printed packets, only the words "A selected variety," this giving the contractor great advantages.

Third—The stipulated weights named in the specifications of the 27th of January, 1900, have not been given, but reduced quantities—from 10 to 50 per cent less than the specifications, this giving the contractor great advantages.

Fourth—Because of other irregularities which can be named, giving the contractor extraordinary advantages for enormous profits.

As the Wholesale Seedsmen's League is composed of men of standing in their line, it is the duty of the government to make a prompt and rigid investigation of these serious charges. Such action is the more imperative because the secretary of the league is reported to have made statements in an interview which may be taken as implicating the Department of Agriculture in the charges as to the manner in which the seeds have been put up and sent out by the contractor. The department cannot afford to have the suspicion of either negligence or implication in irregularities rest upon it. Hitherto it has only been regarded as the helpless medium for the distribution of cheap and sometimes pestiferous seeds of the type of the Russan thistle. Congress being the responsible and ordering body. Implied irregularities, or gross negligeneee in connection with the contracts is another matter which it behooves the department to take cognizance of. It should promptly free itself from any suspicion, if it can. The free distribution of seeds, as it is carried on under the direction of Congress, is a disgraceful exhibition of paternalism, without the shadow of an excuse. But since the Department of Agriculture is compelled to superintend the distribution, it should insist that the specifications of the contract are fully lived up to.—Philadelphia Public Ledger, April 24.

THE ANNUAL GARDEN SEED RAID.

The government is devoting a certain portion of its time and money now in sending out to the constituents who are supposed to be in shape to use the gift certain allotments of garden seeds, procured for the purpose of free distribution from the seedsmen and gardeners over the country. We in the United States laugh at the hereditary absurdities that hinge about the British throne, forgetting that we have a few of our own. One day, no doubt, the garden and field seeds that were distributed by the government were scattered over the country with the intention of introducing new varieties and improving the products of the farm and garden. Farmers were requested to report the success of the experiment that the benefits might be made known generally. The farmer became a helper in exploiting new things.

Now the seeds are sent out in packets, labeled simply "selected variety," without name or description whereby the farmer could report his success if he felt disposed to do it. The whole practice has so far departed from the original design that it is no more than a gift enterprise on the part of the general government, which sometimes gets the right seed into the hands of the man who wants it, and just as often sends the squash seed to the man who has plenty and who would rather have free cucumber seed than so many brussels sprouts, which will not grow in his neighborhood and which he does not like anyway.—Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph.

TOLEDO, O.

The announcement in the last issue of the REVIEW that the Henry Phillips Seed Co., of this city, had been awarded a share of the government seed contract, amounting to over $90,000, was correct, but since that award was made the above named company has received the rest of the order, so they now have the entire contract, amounting to about $200,000.

Trade Conditions.

A perambulating floral salesman of Boston who is as busy as I have to keep myself in order to earn a half-decent living, does not get half the opportunity to see and hear things that might be expected outside of his own narrow personal experiences. And all of these might not look well in print as buyer and buyee do not always observe usages of best society in their negotiations. However, a course of five or six years at one of the 3x3 stands at the Park street market will surely quicken his senses in many directions. I well remember how it bothered me in my freshman year to try to take advantage of the almost daily fluctuations in prices on my commodities. But as time dragged on I began to see that the sound of the room after the people had gathered was a sure thermometer (or barometer, since pressure is measured rather than heat) of the amount of real trade being carried on. It cannot be described nor learned in a short time. This acquired seventh sense of mine told me during the first few days of the week beginning March 21 that the floral condition was getting badly demoralized. And why not? A month of rain and cloud, and conditions getting worse and worse every day. No goods coming in to be sold and nobody coming in to buy them. But really there was just enough going on to handle the extremely light cut of everything. It was lucky for the buyers that a cheap line of material was largely what they looked for, because there was but little else. Things were generally degenerating into a series of rummage sales of floral hash, when old Sol gladdened all hands on Friday by a short call, and Saturday morning found him on hand and acting as if he had come to stay. More goods came in on that day than could be expected as the result of a few minutes of sun the day before and holiday times were illustrated by the way in which buyers climbed after them. Everything was emptied but the pockets of the salesmen.

Prices had been looking up a bit for a day or two, but now jumped up and fought the buyer, tooth and nail. Well, we fear "it's der last chance" until Memorial day. In this case it is "Make hay because the sun did not shine."

LEADVILLE, COLO.—The Leadville Floral Society has taken steps to awaken enthusiasm in the celebration of Arbor Day.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Business is good in every branch of the trade, notwithstanding that for the past few weeks we have had an almost continuous downpour of rain; the weather is simply glorious at present, however. Forsythia and tulips are in bloom in the parks and everything is rapidly bursting into leaf. It looks now as if it were going to be a short and busy season.

The prices on the plant and cut flower market maintain a good average; good stock has somewhat shortened up. We don't hear so much about intended excursions to Europe this year, but there promises to be a general exodus to Buffalo; several of the largest growers have been out there sizing up possibilities for extending their already large exhibits; we are told Julius Roehrs is there at present on a short visit.

The Pan American Exhibition affords splendid opportunities to the American grower. You will remember that floriculture at the World's Fair was not what it ought to have been. Some of the saving points of that show were made by small contributors, which, when combined, made very creditable exhibits. We hope that Brother Scott's endeavors will be supported by everyone; that the series of flower shows will be made great successes—worthy of the country—and this can only be done on the principle that every little helps.

Various Items.

There will be several removals among the store people here this May, owing to the tearing down of the buildings they occupy at present. Alex Warendorf, instead of combining with Fleischman, will occupy a temporary store at 9 West Thirtieth street; M. Hart, the wholesaler, moves over to keep Julius Lang company in Thirtieth street. The Cut Flower Company have moved from Twenty-third street to the corner of Twenty-sixth street and Sixth avenue; they occupy the third floor of the building; down in the basement there are six alleys which will most likely be well patronized during the summer.

The Florists' Club is making great efforts to put up a record breaking show in Madison Square Garden next October; this can only be accomplished by growers preparing for it now; get a schedule and grow something if only one plant. The show at the Bronx park, on May 9, will be of interest to all. Representatives of the Botanical Garden will meet most of the trains and show the visitors over the grounds and buildings. A lecture on "Some Cultivated Plants and Their Flowers" will be given with splendid colored illustrations, by Cornelius Van Brunt, in the museum at 4 p. m. Altogether a pleasant time is assured. The show will continue until the night of the 9th.

The seedsmen at their recent meeting here passed severe resolutions against the government seed scandal. The seedsmen can do anything they want by unity.

The annual meeting of the New York Cut Flower Exchange will be held on Saturday morning, at the Market at Thirty-fourth street ferry. They have another year's lease on the building, but it is expected that this once great institution will be shortly dissolved; most of the principal growers are tired and disgusted with the prevailing conditions and no doubt an important change will soon be made. No doubt they will move up to the wholesale district where, though it may not be so convenient, they will yet have better opportunities to dispose of good stock at living prices.

It's funny how some rumors float about. Most of his comrades had Ghormley retiring from business last week but he assured us that there was no truth in it.

Bowlers keep steadily at work. Last week there was a match between W. J. Stewart and S. Butterfield for a Broadway hat. It's Stewart's time to treat.

The New York bowling team won the Arlington tournament, competing with some of the crack teams of this city. They are steadily preparing for Buffalo. Scores last night were:

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market was active during the end of last and early this week. The return of the sun, absent three weeks out of the four, has closed this rainy month cheerfully. By the time these hurried notes see light we shall in consequence probably be struggling under an avalanche of stock.

Beauties sell well and are fine. Specials bring $2 to $3 a dozen; good flowers, with stems 24 to 30 inches long, bring $1 to $1.50, while small flowers on weak stems are in fair demand at 50 to 75 cents. Brides sell well at $4 to $8 a hundred, most of them bringing $5 and $6. Maids are about the same in price and sell a shade slower. Of the other roses Liberty sells fairly well; special blooms have brought as much as Beauty.

Carnations are wanted—pink a little more so than white; $1.50 to $2 buys pretty nice stock, with fancies a point or two higher. Violets hold out yet a little longer. Lady Campbell is worth 50 cents a hundred and a few brought 75 cents. Valley is used freely at $3 and $4, and mignonette is $2. It isn't the Chestnut St. brand that ornaments the curb but a sort with a saline taste unknown behind plate glass. Smilax sells well at 15 and 18 cents a string and asparagus at 50 cents a bunch. Bulbous stock from outdoors is seen occasionally. Sweet peas are wanted when fine; white varieties are especially scarce.

Plants.

Hardy roses for planting out of doors are in great demand, a few in 5-inch and many in 6-inch pots, at prices ranging from $2.50 to $4 a dozen.

Next week will usher in the bedding plant season. It is very difficult to give an accurate report of this extensive business. It is scattered over too broad an area. Nine-tenths of our growers do a little in this line and many of them seldom figure in the cut flower or palm market; they retail most of their product at their own doors and send the balance to the city. When the bedding season arrives they bob up serenely with an extra fine lot of geraniums, fuchsias, verbenas and other stock, part of which they will wholesale at from 25 to 33 1-3 per cent off their retail price. Of course there are a few large growers of these soft wooded bedding plants, but they do not control the market, which has had rather a downward tendency of late years.

Various Items.

The rose problem is giving some of our growers a good deal of difficulty. The necessity for variety is admitted; the difficulty of making a market for a rose is the drawback, even when it is as well done as the standard sorts.

Meehy's is a sort of mecca for the uptown craft just now. Here the lordly retailer in search of fifty assorted roses is seen side by side with the itinerant street peddlar in search of half a dozen shacks. This place has made a specialty of pot roses for years, and they are as a rule cleverly done.

Edward Drown, of Weldon, has had a good season on small ferns. His houses are now filled with bedding plants and seedling ferns for next season's business. He also has a fern which he believes to be identical with Nephrolepis Wittboldii.

S. Mendelson Meehan has a plan for giving the members of the Germantown Horticultural Society field days, so to speak, during the summer months.

STERILIZING SOIL.

It is generally recognized that the way to combat insects and other pests is to prevent their appearance rather than to attempt to eradicate them after they have obtained a foothold, and it is evident that the only way to effectively guard against the presence of eel worms and grubs in the soil is to sterilize it, or destroy all living organisms it may contain by the application of heat in some form. Some have held that when this is done the soil has been injured as well as the pests killed but recent investigators say that the useful organisms are soon restored to the soil through the medium of the water applied to it.

Among those who have attempted the sterilization of soil on a large scale is Mr. W. W. Rawson, who has large market gardens at Arlington, near Boston. He reports very favorable results during the past two years, though present methods are far from economical. He says:

"I had sterilized in a box that holds about 3 feet, cord measure, and spread it on the top of the beds in my houses about two inches deep. It takes a long time to cover a space of half an acre but it pays. I am trying another plan for next year and expect to sterilize the soil in all my houses, over thirty in number, some half an acre in size, to the depth of a foot. It will cost considerable, but I consider it very beneficial and shall do the whole of them no matter what it costs. It thoroughly renovates the soil and the crop will grow to perfection while all insects are entirely exterminated.

"I heat the soil to 210 degrees and with the arrangement I have perfected can sterilize a space 90 by 16 feet in an hour. With four men this will take four weeks steady work. I cannot now go into further details but may say that all my experiments have been very satisfactory."

If the renovation of the soil is complete as stated by Mr. Rawson it may be possible through this means to do away with the annual refilling of rose and carnation houses. With a number of permanent steam pipes run through each bench it would be possible to rein vigorate the old soil so as to make it available for continued use by the mere addition of fertilizers, as well as insuring absolute freedom from insect and fungous pests in the soil.

The matter is certainly of sufficient importance to warrant further experiment and investigation than it has already received. Certainly no large grower would hesitate at an initial expense of some little amount should it result in doing away with the heavy annual expense of refilling his houses, especially where new soil has been so largely exhausted as in some localities.

FIVE TIMES AS MANY.

I spent $2 in the classified columns of the Review and as a result sold five times as many plants as I did through $25 worth of advertising in another paper. This is experience that can't be gainsaid.—G. P. Moore, Ocean City, N. J.

ST. PAUL.

The damage suit brought by Chris Hansen against the St. Paul Gas Co. was settled out of court to Mr. Hansen's satisfaction by the company after the case had been on trial two days.

Mr. Hansen in his complaint said that he owns fourteen greenhouses on Dale street, near Como avenue and Front street. In 1898, as he complains, the defendant put in gas mains. The gas escaped, and he demanded $12,000 for the plants killed, $3,000 for the flowers which he could not sell by themselves and $300 for extra expenses and $5,000 for injury to his trade.

The defendant denied the allegations of the complaint, and also said that it had laid the gas mains on the premises of the plaintiff, that he would take and use gas in his establishment, which he did not do.

The case had been to the supreme court on a motion to strike out portions of the pleadings, and in this appeal the plaintiff was successful.

After the case had been on trial two days the company's attorney evidently saw the case was going against them and therefore offered Mr. Hansen a satisfactory settlement, which was accepted.

BUFFALO HOTELS.

The Buffalo Florists' Club have undertaken to arrange for the accommodation of all visitors who expect to attend the convention of the S. A. F. in Buffalo.

While it is true that hotel rates will be higher than usual, there are any number of apartment houses that have been fitted out for the accommodation of Pan-American visitors; also private houses in the residence portion of the city, where rooms can be had for $1 and up for each person, and in many breakfast will be served if desired, while other places will give all meals, the latter not so plentiful.

The hotel committee have a list of houses and hotels with the rates, and any person or persons wishing to engage rooms can have same secured in advance by addressing the chairman of the committee, W. A. Adams, 479 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y., stating whether they want accommodations at hotel, apartment or private house, with or without breakfast, and the number of persons desiring accommodations together. It will be necessary to inform the committee early, as they have the refusal of several apartments for the week, where from one hundred to one hundred and fifty can be accommodated in one place.

It will be unnecessary to communicate with W. J. Stewart, secretary of the S. A. F., as the executive committee look to the Buffalo Club to accommodate the visitors, which the hotel committee are willing to do, providing they are notified in time.

Street car facilities are excellent, the restaurants plentiful and rates reasonable. No one will be overcharged at any place, and with the above desirable apartments and private houses every one will be taken care of if they notify the committee in time.

THE COMMITTEE.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL.

After reading Mr. Wm. Scott's Manual, we wish to say that we consider it without equal as a book of reference for busy florists.
GEORGE M. KELLOGG.
Pleasant Hill, Mo.

Mr. Scott's superb work, "The Florists' Manual," was indeed worth waiting for. When compared with the amount of practical information it contains, the selling price, $5.00, seems a mere bagatelle.
Oakland, Md. H. WEBER & SONS.

It is the best book of the kind ever published. There is more in it than in any other book I have ever seen. I am delighted with it.
Chicago. JOHN THORPE.

The copy of the "Florists' Manual" was duly received. I am very well pleased with same. The more I read it the better satisfied I am with it, and there are one or two articles alone in it that are each worth all you ask for the book, for everything is made so plain and all details are right to the point. I trust you may have a good and ready sale for the same. M. S. WORDEN.
North Adams, Mass.

The only fault to be found with it is when you get using it the midnight oil is liable to run low and you have to go on to gas or reluctantly break off, either going to bed or first taking a look over the houses to see if the temperature tallies with the Manual.
Hartford, Conn. GEO. S. OSBORN.

We are in receipt of "The Florists' Manual," by Mr. Scott, and may say it is the right book for the florist, published at the right time. It is what we all need.
BOBBINK & ATKINS.
Rutherford, N. J.

Am much pleased with the Manual. It is just what I have been looking for. Something that we can understand, and enjoy reading.
Etna, Pa. M. NAUMAN.

I am very much pleased with the Manual. It is just what we have needed for a long time. N. ZWEIFEL.
Milwaukee, Wis.

It is certainly a neat and handsome book and does you credit.
BENJAMIN HAMMOND.
Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

It is a work of art and should be in the hands of all live florists. Its useful and instructive contents cannot fail to be a benefit to all in the trade. C. C. POLLWORTH CO.
Milwaukee, Wis.

I greatly appreciate the Florists' Manual. It is a splendid text-book.
JOHN WELSH YOUNG.
Germantown, Pa.

The Florists' Manual is worth five times the price. It is just what a busy florist wants.
Columbus, O. B. BUEHLER & SON.

Am well pleased with the Manual. It is a practical, everyday helper, concise and to the point. W. A. KENNEDY.
Milwaukee, Wis.

Am very much pleased with the book; it is very handy for reference.
Macomb, Ill. F. E. BONHAM.

Unlike so many of our books, it has the very flavor and essence of actual experience.
Ithaca, N. Y. L. H. BAILEY.

We find the book very useful as a reference in answering the many questions about plants that we receive almost every day.
Philadelphia. JOS. KIFT & SON.

We have gotten much valuable instruction from the Florists' Manual and prize it highly.
Franklin, Tenn. TRUETT BROS.

The Florists' Manual is a gem. No florist can afford to be without it.
Madison, N. J. A. J. BAUR.

If everyone has enjoyed your book as I have it's a successful publication. It is different from our usual horticultural works, being plain and concise—just what one wants.
Flushing, N. Y. H. D. DARLINGTON.

I am more than pleased with the Florists' Manual. OTT BROWN.
Cape May City, N. J.

Manual to hand. Am well satisfied that it is the best work of its kind ever published.
Joliet, Ill. JAS. HARTSHORNE.

No progressive florist, old or young, can afford to be without the Florists' Manual. The old florist needs it, for reference, to aid a defective memory, and the young florist wants it as a guide in this progressive era of the florists' business. J. T. TEMPLE.
Davenport, Ia.

The Commissioners of Parks and Boulevards some time since directed that a library be started of such books as deal with subjects pertaining to park work, and to that end an order has been given for a number of books, among which is your "The Florists' Manual."

After reading this book carefully, I am greatly pleased, and wish to congratulate you on the practical manner with which you have treated the subject.

The book is placed where it will be accessible to all of our greenhouse employes, whereby this board expects to reap a saving many times the cost of the book. Respectfully yours,
COMMISSIONERS OF PARKS AND BOULEVARDS.
JOHN A. CORYELL, Gen'l Supt.
Detroit, Mich.

The book is written for the working gardener, and Mr. Scott's reputation is so well secured that he will find among his gardening friends a host of genuine admirers. As a writer on practical gardening subjects, Mr. Scott is a recognized authority. * * * Mr. Scott has long been an employer and knows what information young gardeners, or those with little experience, need, and he has his whole subject so perfectly at command that he can give the most desirable and essential information in the clearest language and with satisfactory brevity. The book is a distinct and important gain to the practical garden literature of this country, and it should be in the hands of every gardener, and everyone engaged or interested in ornamental horticulture. The price of the book is $5, which seems somewhat high, but for useful information it is worth every cent of it.—Vick's Magazine.

Florists' Manual, by William Scott. Publishers, Florists' Publishing Company, Chicago. Price, $5.

From advance sheets of the Florists' Manual, kindly sent us by the publishers, as well as from those which have appeared from time to time in the trade press, we have formed an idea of the general scope and usefulness of Mr. Scott's book, and we now hail with a great deal of satisfaction the work as a completed whole. Several handbooks of a more or less similar nature, dealing with commercial plant culture in America, or some portions of it rather, have been placed on the market; but the teachings which they convey have, as the years rolled by, become to a greater or less extent obsolete, owing to the continued mutability in methods etc., so that the Manual containing, as it does, matter which is strictly up-to-date, and thoroughly practical, should meet with a ready acceptance among all engaged in the industry upon which it treats. The caliber of Mr. Scott's instructions, in matters horticultural, is too well known to the trade to require any elucidation at our hands; suffice it to say that the same soundness of method and masterful handling of every subject dealt with, generally characterizes the text of the book now before us. Nearly 200 individual items are discussed, and, as regards plants, largely those of commercial value, the staples of the trade receiving greatest attention.—Florists' Exchange.

The Florists' Manual, by Wm. Scott. Florists' Publishing Co., Chicago. A reference book for commercial florists.

The author's first aim in preparing this work was to fill a long felt want among florists a book describing the best plants commercially, with cultural advice founded on experience. Viewed in this light, it is a valuable and instructive work, very complete in its details. But it need not be confined to circulation among the florists and others connectedly connected, although gardeners and amateurs need not expect in it a work exactly fitting their requirements. Rather judge it through the author's own words, i. e.: "If those who favor us with a perusal of its pages glean only one hint which may help them * * * they will have received value for their money." A work resulting from Mr. Scott's long and varied experience, "from selling a bunch of violets over the counter to planting a tree or seeding a lawn or building a greenhouse," cannot but throw out many hints of value to any one interested in any line of horticulture or flower gardening. The comparatively small index confronting the reviewer at first is far from encouraging, but as the purpose of the author is more clearly brought to light, it is better appreciated. It shows the intention to treat of the most desirable and profitable things to handle—a consideration which many will enjoy. Many interesting subjects are brought to headings, such as "Easter Plants," "Watering," "Decorations," "Potting," "Bedding Plants," etc. Not the least of value to the possessor of this book are the beautiful half-tone illustrations, numbering more than 100, and thoroughly illustrating the subjects treated. Critical persons may object to the interspersing of advertisements with the reading matter, though it is not made very obtrusive; yet it must be remembered that the work is designed for commercial purposes, and not strictly as a library book.—Meehan's Monthly.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL...

By WM. SCOTT

IS A BOOK of 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review) and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopædia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It is and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold.

TORONTO.

The regular meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Association was held on Monday, April 22d, and being the last regular meeting until September, all agreed that it should be Ladies' Night. This proved the best possible kind of a meeting socially. The program under the direction of the president pleased all present, after which very dainty refreshments were served by a local caterer, during which time Mr. J. H. Dunlop entertained those present with his excellent phonograph.

Roses, carnations, tulips, etc., were sent by J. H. Dunlop, Walter Muston, W. J. Lawrence, and some palms, etc., by Mr. A. Watkins. Mr. E. Collins did the arranging.

We have had some grand weather during the past week, it being very warm during the day, which means good bye to our large Bride and Bridesmaid blooms. Carnations are also beginning to show signs of too much heat. W. J. L.

CONVENTION EXHIBITION.

A printed diagram of the hall in which the trade exhibition is to be held in connection with the S. A. F. convention in Buffalo next August, together with the printed rules and regulations, has been issued by Superintendent Keitsch. The hall is 115x180 feet and the locations of the various classes are indicated on the diagram. This convention promises to be a memorable one, with an unusually large attendance, and the exhibition will no doubt be in keeping.

Anyone having any article of trade interest can find no better way of bringing it to the attention of the craft than by showing it at this exhibition. Copies of the diagram, regulations, etc., may be obtained by addressing Chas. H. Keitsch, Superintendent, 270 Southampton street, Buffalo, N. Y.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Various Notes.

The weather suddenly changed after sending in my last report, and we have been having a taste of July heat which is somewhat enervating. Some commenced planting carnations in the field last week; others are ready, but are waiting for cooler or more cloudy weather to render it safe to plant. Violets are over and the propagating is under full swing. It takes about 100,000 violet plants to refill the Grand Rapids violet houses, then there is about that quantity potted up for sales. About 60 per cent of the violet crop next season will be Imperial and Marie Louise, the remaining 40 per cent Lady Hume Campbell and a few white. The dark violets sell best through the entire season; the Lady Campbell is all right until about the 1st of February, when it begins to get a bit light. The Campbell is the best variety to grow in the south, as it is a warmer growing violet than the dark ones, requiring 10 degrees more heat to get the best results. It will succeed very well where the dark ones fail.

For the first time this winter business is a little quiet. Shipping has dropped off some, just enough to leave roses plentiful and carnations just about equal to the demand; none going to waste. There are many lilies around town and some are being sold so cheap, it makes one shudder. Roses, A1 stock, bring from 75 cents to $1.25. Carnations, 35 to 50 cents per doz.

James Schols is still sick ahed.

In the April number of the American Journal of Science appears a very interesting illustrated article by Mr. W. T. Bell, the florist of Franklin, Pa., on the probable origin of the huge spherical rocks found in Ottawa county, Kansas. Some of these rocks are more than twelve feet in diameter, and the deposit in question, consisting of more than fifty detached specimens, is known locally as "Rock City." Some shown in the pictures are almost perfect spheres.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Mr. P. R. Quinlan, of the firm of P. R. Quinlan & Co., has recently returned from a visit to Venezuela. He is a member of the asphalt syndicate about whose concession from the Venezuelan government there has been such a political disturbance.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The greenhouses of Edward Wolff, at Greenfield, were badly injured by fire the night of April 21. The loss is estimated at $1,700. The greenhouses on the property formerly owned by the late Alexander Mitchell are being torn down.

New Haven, Conn.—At the last meeting of the Horticultural Society a committee was appointed to prepare a preliminary schedule of prizes for an exhibition next November.

TARRYTOWN, N Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held April 25, President Smith in the chair. The executive committee reported the following essays and dates for the balance of the year:

May 2—Dracaenas, Joseph Mooney.
June 27—Small Fruits, David McFarland.
July 25—Useful Commercial Ferns, J. M. Cooke.
Aug. 29—Cyclamens, J. E. White.
Sept. 26—Hardy Shrubs, Thomas Cockburn.
Oct. 31—General Propagation, J. W. Coley.
Nov. 28—Carnations, William Scott.
Dec —Election of officers and annual dinner.

Mr. C. E. Nossiter was proposed for membership. Alex McClelland, of Sing Sing, and Alfred E. Cooke and Mr. Grossman, were elected to membership. Two handsome Spirea astilboides in 7-inch pots was the exhibit from Mr. Wm. Scott and the judges (A. E. White and David McFarland) awarded a certificate of merit.

On motion the secretary was instructed to send a letter of sympathy to Brother Andrew Grierson.

Mr. Turner, our late president, having left Tarrytown it was thought best to fill vacancy in executive committee and Mr. Steven-on was duly elected to fill the same. Mr. Shore, of Harrison, a member of the Portchester Society, being present on invitation, announced his subject and read an able paper on, "Where are we at?" at the close of which he was cheered again and again and was given a vote of thanks for his paper and his visit.

H. J. Rayner, Cor. Sec.

"AT REST."

The Chicago Gazette prints the following story regarding "Pete" Dailey:

"That fat and gifted man before he graced our stage, used to wait on customers in a small butter and egg store on the East Side in New York. When Peter made his first appearance, his East Side friends decided to corner the flower market and mark his debut with a fitting floral tribute. The chairman of the committee of arrangements was a prosperous German undertaker, and his professional instincts so far got the best of him that when Mr. Dailey came before the curtain in response to enthusiastic applause, he was staggered at receiving over the footlights a huge pillow of white roses, on which was traced in purple immortelles, AT REST."

CUT FLOWERS BY MAIL.

Our attention has been called to several small advs. in an English paper of general circulation, of which the following is a sample:

A BOX OF BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS and FOLIAGE, 1s. 6d. upwards: free. DOBIES, Growers, CHESTER.

Our correspondent thinks that the florists of America might find a useful suggestion in this.

Greenville, O.—Mary Elizabeth Frost, wife of James Frost, the florist, died April 24 after a long illness from progressive paralysis. She was 52 years of age. While her friends mourn her death, they bow with a feeling of thankfulness that her sufferings are ended. To the bereaved husband all extend sympathy and words of consolation.

Toledo, O.—A new greenhouse is soon to be erected at Calvary cemetery. Henry Bresser, the sexton, will place the order.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Wedding Bouquets.

The most important part of a bridal outfit from the florist's point of view is the bouquet, but from a long and close observation we regret to state that to the great majority of florists the bouquet usually means a heavy, cabbage shaped bunch of white flowers for which the poor, enthusiastic "man in the case" pays dearly.

Of course every one is acquainted with the rule that the bride's parents provide the church and house decorations, and the bridegroom the flowers to be carried or worn. Many brides dictate the selection and make up of their bouquets, but in the majority of cases the man goes to what he considers the best places in town, gets suggestions from the florist, pays a good price and goes away convinced that he has done his best to surprise his girl and combat critical friends. But, alas, the general conception of the bride's bouquet is size and weight, and this is the only reason why bouquets are becoming unpopular among the refined people.

We use plain language; many don't like unvarnished words. There will always be a Cheap John, slap dash sort of trade; lack of ability's only hope, only resource, is cheapness, but it is wrong to imagine that there is only a diminutive sort of appreciation for the artistic; there are a great many people who at all times prefer the choice and the dainty to the coarse and big—a vast army who at times are willing to pay for the very best artistically.

Floral art has its renaissance; the present period is one of the most critical; there is a "best" in everything which survives, and this matter of the bride's bouquet deserves deep consideration. To preserve all that is most picturesque and beautiful is the special duty of the florist. Flowers have a refining influence, his arranging of them should add to that influence by being the quintessence of good taste. A bride will ransack every store, devote all her energy, spend her last dollar if necessary, to look her best on her wedding day. To obliterate a dainty, costly lace dress with your cheap ribbon or asparagus "shower bouquet" is a crime; it is one of the few exceptional cases where flowers are vulgar because the florist is ignorant.

If by what we write here we can induce a few to make their bouquets lighter, we will have done some good. We have often been told by brides that they would refuse to carry the bouquets sent them by even high-toned florists, were it not for the fact that they were the gift of the man they loved. We have watched brides walk to the altar carrying the bouquet upside down, and others where they had to use both hands to grasp the handle of the huge bunch; is it any wonder then that in the very cases where flowers should be carried, we see and read of them carrying prayerbooks? And this is on the increase.

There is scarcely anything requiring so much ability as the making of an ideal bouquet; it is an art well worth studying. The present age may be truly considered the commercial one, but it is also critical and appreciative. At this time of the year there is an abundance of splendid material distinctly appropriate to the subject under discussion. We should do our best to get out of the narrow rut of ieebox stock. There is a dreadful sameness, a trying monotony in our present every day supply. It is our own lack of appreciation of the truly beautiful which prevents the public from buying and enjoying many of the finest floral gems.

In New York we have every class, every nationality, to deal with; many of them insist on getting what they were accustomed to at home, and many grotesque affairs are seen. Some of the Latin and even Saxon races still ask for the foulard or carton holders, but there are distinctly American styles of bouquets that have neither been copied from, nor hold second place to any in Europe.

A very beautiful custom has been revived—the wearing of a wreath of roses. No large roses can be used in this design, they must be very small, such as Manda's Wichuraiana hybrids, or polyantha roses; very little foliage, no fixing up, just a natural spray wreath. Many prefer this to the cluster of orange blossoms, the half wreath of valley, or clumsy substitute. Let us run over the list of available material with suggestions.

White lilac with one red or pink rose, white velvet ribbon, short streamer, long loop, for bride. Bunches of apple blossoms, pink silk cord, for bridesmaids; same flowers for men. Loose bunch of gardenias with not much foliage, tie with two white silk cords. Gardenia for head spray, loose bunches of double pink azaleas with pink ribbon for bridesmaids.

Long spray of magnolias with thin string of asparagus tenuissimus, stems wound in white ribbon, to be carried on left arm. Red bud ,peach or high colored sprays of blossoms similarly arranged for bridesmaids. Bouquet of Daphne Indica alba, one Liberty rose, tie broad white ribbon; pink bouvardia for attendants.

Long spray bunch of Cherokee roses, handle twisted with and tied with a few streamers of narrow ribbon. Crimson Rambler sprays for bridesmaids.

Bouquet of Lamarque roses, ribbon handle, no bow streamers. Moss roses and Testouts or La France for attendants.

Loose bunch of white sweet peas, and match bunches of pink sweet peas, broad ribbons or silk cords.

A few white orchids can almost always be found on any orchidist's place, and they are of course the queens of all flowers. The most beautiful and popular way of arranging them is the light, long spray with one or two fronds of Farleyense, very little, if any, ribbon. Odontoglossom crispum, phalænopsis, Vanda cærulea, œlogyne, white cattleyas or any kind in fact can be made use of, but rough greens, poor quality ribbon and compactness must be avoided. Where orchids are carried by the bride, cattleyas should be carried by the bridesmaids.

A long spray bunch of stephanotis mixed with Rhynecospermum jasminoides makes something specially choice; the foliage is too stiff, of course, but you cannot use Asparagus plumosus or smilax consistently as a substitute. A finer green, like a spray or two of Ficus repens with silk covered wire and Adiantum gracillimum, makes a better job.

Fine work can be done with carnations; the entire outfit should be of this flower. There are two ways. The most classical is to carry loose bunches across the left arm, and in the case of bridesmaids, alternately right and left. The flowers for the sides should be specially fine, so neat to tie them, and they should be very loose and irregular. The other way is to make up loose, round bouquets and tie with very broad ribbon, white for the bride, pink or any other color for the rest.

Swainsona is rather heavy, but with light greens makes a good bouquet, and genista is good to match. Flowers such as camellias, echaris, Jasminum gracillimum, Bouvardia Humboldtii, etc., are adapted for head-dress or clusters. We think a cluster of something, or even one flower, at the side of a bouquet, always lends character to it, takes the sameness away and gives it finish.

There is no end to the combinations one can make. Valley and orchids, white roses and valley, or roses, jasminum or rhynchospermum and of orange blossoms with all can go.

A bouquet of white daisies for the bride, yellow ones for her maids, can be made to look pretty. A great many brides are averse to carrying white flowers for the reason that the color emphasizes their own if they happen to be pale. There is an increasing demand for bride's bouquets made of American Beauties or red roses. No sensible florist will make up a set of wedding bunches without first inquiring about the color of the dresses to be worn. Choice of flower mainly depends on that point; the ribbon especially should be the exact shade of flower or dress: there can be no compromise.

There are many grand roses and carnations on the market which could be brought into prominence and kept in cultivation were the average florist equal to the requirements of his profession. My friends, the ideal bouquet is not the flat headed, fern rimmed thing we even see at the exhibitions; it is something far above that. Let us see less of the chromo and more of the water color in our art. Size does not always count; quality is more generally preferred. Attend to the strict rules of correctness; make your bouquets small and dainty, for then they will be carried with pleasure. Keep coarse greens away from tender flowers. Remember the dress is more important than your bunch. The finish is everything: have no tinfoil, no heavy rims of ferns or smilax, but a creation of your best endeavor. Ivera.

LILIES AND FERNS.

We present herewith an engraving from a bunch of lilies and ferns arranged by the Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago. The ferns used are fronds of the Nephrolepis Wittboldii, which are proving exceedingly useful in such work, taking the place of cycas leaves at much less cost, as well as being a great deal more graceful.

There is certainly a great future for this fern in supplying material for use in floral arrangements as well as a decorative plant. The fronds last exceedingly well. To test this point to our satisfaction we recently obtained several cut fronds and kept them in vases of water in a living room. They remained in good condition for three or four days and were in fair shape at the end of a week.

This valuable characteristic appealed to us so strongly that we requested the Messrs. Wittbold to make up and photograph for us the arrangement from which the engraving is made. It is certainly a very pretty bunch and will no doubt be of interest to many.

THE LAWSON CARNATION.

Owing to numerous inquiries a few hints on the cultivation of the Lawson may not be out of place at this season.

Cuttings propagated any time during February or March will make best stock for early planting and blooming. By "early" I mean plants to be housed latter part of July or first week in August. If wanted for later planting cuttings taken in April (owing to its rapid growth and great vitality) make grand stock for taking indoors in August and September.

Early stock should be put in 2-inch pots and re-potted along as they require until in 3½-inch or 4-inch, but it is not advisable to have the size larger than 4-inch as the ball will be too large to transplant in benches where 4 inches in depth is the limit.

As soon as danger of frost is over the stock may be planted out in the field, and as they are to be lifted early they need not be planted wide apart. Usually the distance will be governed by the width of the Planet, Junior, or other wheel hoe to be used in their cultivation, and 6 to 8 inches apart in many cases will be sufficient between plants in the row.

The first defect in the Lawson is a tendency to throw short stems on first blooms early in the season, if the plants are allowed to make their flowering growth in the field. To remedy this, go over the plants, say ten days before housing, and carefully pinch back all flowering growths, so that their flowering shoots are made under glass. This will insure a much longer stem on first blooms, that will keep increasing as the season advances.

The Lawson is an early (and by reason of its exceptional vitality continuous) bloomer, throwing up its growth in rapid succession so that it comes as near being continuous as any variety yet produced. Its productiveness is wonderful, considering the quality of the blooms, and to stimulate this a liberal supply of nourishment is necessary. I find an occasional top dressing of pulverized sheep manure every two weeks suits it admirably, commencing early in November and continuing all through the winter and spring season. Should the soil appear to be affected, or sour, withhold the sheep manure and substitute a good dusting of air-slaked lime.

Another important point is a tendency of the blooms to fade or "bleach" around the edges on the sudden appearance of sunshine after dull, cloudy weather. We have little trouble in this respect as our houses run north and south and so do not get the direct light in winter, which has been in our favor in the cultivation of this variety, and the reason why I have failed to warn others whose aspect is the reverse. We have had no shading on our houses until three weeks ago, when the east side was shaded, and now we are lightly shading the west. I would advise those growing the Lawson with a southern aspect to shade say 4 to 6 inches down the center of each square or row of glass, as early in the season as this trouble appears, increasing the shade with the season.

If you have any of your houses running east and west, plant Lawson in them, or in any houses that get partial shade from other structures. It will well repay any extra care bestowed.

In other respects the culture of the Lawson does not differ from the average carnation. Only during the dull months of winter I find it beneficial to run the night temperature at from 52 to 55 degrees, keeping it as near the latter as possible. This promotes a steady growth and prevents splitting and other evils caused in my opinion by slow or arrested development.

There is little or no splitting in the fall or spring. Why is not raising the temperature essential to offset this trouble in winter? Peter Fisher.

Ellis, Mass., April 29, 1901.

FORCED BULBS.

Are tuberoses good to use again after they have been in bloom? Also are paper white narcissus and Roman hyacinths of any use after they have flowered, and are they hardy enough for outside use? Also the Dutch Romans. L.

In answer to the above I will say, first, that tuberoses are now so inexpensive in quantities (you can buy them for 85 or 86 a thousand, good bulbs) that it would be absurd to try and save any bulbs that have once been forced. You could not do it for twice the sum that you can now buy them for.

The same can be said of narcissus and Roman hyacinths. These bulbs are grown several years by the Frenchmen, who do all they can to raise a fine bulb in a natural way in the richest of soils, picking off the flowers as soon as developed. We treat them very differently. All we seek is to force out the flower that they prepare for us. Both would flower again feebly, but it would never pay.

Contrary to what many gardeners suppose, the white Roman hyacinth is hardy. As proof of this, Peter Henderson & Co. have many thousands of these now in bloom at the Pan-American Exposition which were planted late last December. If it was a winter with little snow and the bulbs were unprotected and the ground was continually freezing and thawing they would possibly not come through the winter. But planted deeply, then allowing a little frost to get in the ground and covering over with a few inches of litter or stable manure, the Roman hyacinths come through finely. They can also be frozen in boxes outside, when prepared for forcing, but never should be handled in that way; or rather never should be brought suddenly into a warm house.

The paper white narcissus does not want any frost at all.

There is no such thing as Dutch Romans. Possibly your correspondent means the small Dutch hyacinth. These when not forced for very early flowering and allowed to dry off gradually can be planted again in the following October or November and give a fairly good flower out of doors and will do fairly well for several years, but never depend on any of these bulbs for forcing the second year. As every one knows, the Dutch hyacinth is as hardy as a tulip and will survive any winter we have. William Scott.

HARDY PLANTS.

Editor Florists' Review: In compliance with your request, I give you my views regarding the plan that appeared in your last issue. I agree with Mr. Higgins as to the great adaptability of hardy plants for the city yard, but am inclined to favor a few more shrubs, or some vines, to ramble over the fence. As a rule the majority of our perennials are not attractive enough during the whole season to win popular favor, and being planted in front of a few shrubs or a green vine on the fence will help them out admirably. Not every shrub will give satisfaction in the more densely settled parts of the city, but such old standbys as the Philadelphus, flowering currant, honeysuckles, sumach, etc., will thrive almost anywhere.

Looking over the list for the front plat there may arise some objection to Aster Novæ-Angliæ, Helenium autumnale, and probably Boltonia latisquamæ, for such a prominent place. Let us take into consideration that the average person must have something to catch and hold his attention at once to create in him an interest that will later develop into a longing for higher knowledge of plant life and an appreciation of its varied beauty. Mr. Higgins and myself need no stimulant in this direction and we both love the New England aster, but in selecting stock for a city plat where the number and variety is to be limited I would suggest for the same position the bushier Heliopsis Pitcherianus.

The trouble with Helenium autumnale is its poverty of foliage. The asters have to some extent the same fault and are apt to look ragged, besides their foliage is not attractive enough. I have tried them in beds, pinched back as you would chrysanthemums, but have never been able to overcome a certain weedy look.

Boltonia latisquamæ is somewhat better and planted in a corner where its lower stems can be well covered by other plants like the pretty Chelone Lyoni it should not be altogether discarded. I should select it for the rear plat.

Hibiscus Crimson Eye is preferable to H. militaris for the front, and so is either Aquilegia cærulea or the pretty Skinneri tribe preferable to canadense. Such plants as Yucca filamentosa, Campanula carpathica, Coreopsis lanceolata, Achillea millefolium roseum, A. ptarmica fl. pl., Sweet Bahn (monarda), cadalia and ribbon grasses, peonies, Clematis recta and C. Davidiana, should never be omitted when planning a city garden.

To the plants named by Mr. Higgins I would add such bulbous plants as snowdrops, scilias and chionodoxa. The last named winters splendidly here and will come up year after year. I would not leave out lily of the valley for a shady nook (there is already a large patch in a spot not shown in the plan.—Ed.).

Mertensia virginica is pretty indeed, but its flowering period is, I fear, too short to aid in creating enthusiasm in the average city resident. Neither does Yucca filamentosa last long in flower, but the semi-tropical appearance of the plant gives it a distinction that the quiet ordinary mind must appreciate.

I would also advocate a generous planting of the beautiful Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora and the pretty little Berberis Thunbergii, the gem of the dwarf shrubs.

Chicago. JAMES JENSEN.

[We omitted some of the plants named by Mr. Jensen as desirable additions because they were included in the planting plan and evidently overlooked by Mr. Jensen. We invited Mr. Jensen to give us his view on these plans, so as to bring out as much information as possible. At the same time we know that Mr. Higgins has the best of reasons for selecting the subjects he did. It may be well to state that the plat in question is close to Lake Michigan, a locality with which Mr. Higgins has long been familiar, while Mr. Jensen's experience has been largely in localities several miles away from the lake, and this proximity to the lake makes a wide difference as to hardiness. And a part of the plan was to use only plants that could be absolutely depended upon in this respect. We have asked for suggested changes in the plan from a number of widely separated localities, knowing well that in more favored sections certain subjects can be most advantageously used that it would be useless to plant here, and we hope in this way to provide useful suggestions for all sections.—Ed.].

PERENNIALS.

Perennials are a class of plants which every garden, large or small, may possess and which add to its beauty from early spring until late autumn. A great many of the very early spring flowers belong to the bulb family; but at the same time there are many perennials that bloom full as early, such as pansies, daisies, iris, hardy primroses, etc. Following these come bleeding-heart, peonies, foxglove, German iris, sweet williams, garden pinks and a host of others. In mid-summer we have the varieties of phlox, Golden Glow, blanket flower, hollyhock, followed by those of fall flowering, such as perennial asters and a list that time does not allow us to mention.

Some of the early flowering sorts make their growth in the late fall, which growth is checked by the cold blasts of winter. Early the coming spring we find them again in active growth. In case these varieties of perennials are to be transplanted autumn transplanting is to be recommended. Again we find many perennials making their growth after the flowering season and then remain in a dormant condition until the following spring. To this family belong dicentra, lilies, etc. These plants should not be cut down after flowering, only the flowers removed, as the vitality of the plant is diminished by cutting the stock, thus rendering it impossible to make the necessary preparatory growth for the next season's flowering period.

To grow perennials in their most perfect beauty it requires a well manured, deep worked soil. It is a great mistake to think that perennials once planted will care for themselves. Such seems to be the incorrect idea and it is a pitiful sight sometimes to see these plants making an effort to blossom overgrown with weeds and given no attention whatever. During recent years there has been a tendency to neglect perennials; however, some of our most beautiful flowers are to be found in the perennials of the old fashioned gardens. A beautiful display of flowers and blending of color can be gained by proper management and a succession of colors second to none other.

We need but to glance over the list of these flowers from the tall growing and stately sunflower and hollyhocks, with their rich and dainty colorings, to the diminutive dwarf daisies, to see the possibilities that lie within the collection. If only a little care in arranging, and attention after planting is given, lo! what a fairyland of blossoms one may have at a trivial cost, which in many private gardens, at least, would make them more than welcome. Let us hope, therefore, that we may see more of grandmother's flowers in our gardens and that they may receive their proper heritage of beauty and grace in the twentieth century garden. C. M. H.

AN EMPLOYES' ASSOCIATION.

Editor Florists' Review: Your request for an expression of opinion in regard to the proposed association of employes is one that deserves careful consideration, for the problem seems to be a knotty one, and also appears to have gone far beyond the good advice contained in the moderate and sensible paper read by Mr. Knope at Detroit.

The chief objects of a labor union among the members of any handicraft are the protection of its members and the promotion of their financial interests, but one of the worst features in nearly all such unions is the fact that the entire membership stands on one level as to pay, and thus the union is most beneficial to the indifferent workman.

It has been suggested that an organization of really capable workmen should be formed, but just imagine the thorny path of the committee on membership of such an organization, and the great difficulty of fixing arbitrary standards by which to guide such a committee.

There also appears to be an obstacle to the success of such a union in the fact that our business is spread over a great area and is mostly in small establishments, there being probably not more than 25,000 employes in about 10,000 establishments, this estimate allowing for quite a liberal increase in numbers since the census of 1890.

That there is room for improvement is quite evident while we find some employers who desire to engage a skillful plantsman, a capable manager and a real floral artist all combined for the magnificent sum of $25.00 per month and board, the latter including a boudoir over the boiler house, but there are also employers who really appreciate efficient help and are willing to give due credit.

There is also the possibility of the employe becoming a partner or starting in business on his own account and in such a case it is highly probable that the union would be much less alluring to the man than before and on the whole there seems to be numerous obstacles and many details to be considered, and this, Mr. Editor, is not the view of a pessimist, but of one who feels some interest in the welfare of his fellow employes. W. H. Taplin.

In regard to starting an employes' association would say I am heartily in favor of such a movement. I have often thought that such an association would be a benefit to the employer as well as the employe if the membership were restricted to good, capable men; otherwise it would be useless.

It would give the employer a better chance to get good men and furthermore it would protect the employe against men who have only a limited knowledge of their profession. At all events let us have such an association of good practical men.

John B. Rudy.
Gardener to Hon. J. S. Fassett, Elmira, N. Y.

Those who have written favoring such an organization have not told us what benefits would result from it except that it would lead to more intimate acquaintance and sociability, and might be the means of obtaining higher wages for its members. Those who would be eligible to join it are so widely scattered that the social features could be better attained through the florists' clubs, and, once a year, through the Society of American Florists.

In order to increase the wages of the employed it would have to be practically a trades union, and these have been the cause of so much enforced idleness and suffering and lawlessness, and would at once antagonize employers — between whom and those who work for them there should be, if anything, more friendly relations—that it seems to me this should not be undertaken.

Trade unions are of the most benefit to the unskillful and the incompetent, and the capable workman who is willing to do what he is hired to do, honestly, and to the interest of his employer and himself, lowers himself by associating with the shirkers. Those who are skillful and willing and trusty seldom lack employment, for all over the country men are looking and advertising for such; and if you needed such a person today you would have some trouble to find one unengaged.

The workman who likes his occupation and wants to succeed, should learn all he can about it through study and thought and observation, and if he is so unfortunate as to be engaged by an ignorant boor who will not pay his wages promptly, let him leave his service as soon as he can honorably and seek employment with a gentleman; and as soon as possible, let him engage in business for himself, and become in his turn an employer; and when he is engaged in the weekly hustle for the means to pay the men at 5 o'clock on Saturdays, he will conclude that employes are not the only ones who have troubles. W. T. Bell.

HARDY PLANTS.

Another Plan.

We have chosen as a subject for this week's example in home decoration a two-story house, 24x38 feet, standing on the west half of a double lot 50x100 feet on the southeast corner of the block, south front, having no fence on the street sides of lot.

The arrangement includes only moderately tall shrubbery and a few tall perennials, because it is never advisable in a city to plant trees which will attain a large size, in a limited space, and they should never be so near a house that they will overshadow it with their branches.

In the plan the front line of porch is 30 feet from inner edge of sidewalk, but the same arrangement could still be used if the distance were 10 feet less. It would only bring the shrubs at the right nearer to the front.

An important consideration in making a selection for the group like the one here indicated is to have it so that the planting may be kept in shape and preserved from year to year without expert assistance. All the plants and shrubs named have endured ordinary winters here in Chicago without special protection and will doubtless prove hardy except far north. John Higgins.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

General Notes.

The Pan-American Exposition threw its gates open to the public on Wednesday, May 1. The dedication and opening ceremonies which were to have taken place that day have been postponed till the 20th. We might have had an earlier spring, as we had two years ago, and outside work could have been begun the first week of March, but we had an average spring, so there is no excuse on that account. The fact is, the few weeks between the going of winter and the opening of May are all too short for such an immense amount of work as should be done, and there are here and there places which yet need the finishing stroke. There is, however, beauty enough to satisfy any one, and visitors can see plainly what an enchanting scene the whole will be when completed.

The department of works has a very large force of men and has been working hard placing the evergreen trees in position around the Grand court, where they are most effective as a relief to the immense amount of building. The hyacinths planted on both sides of the Grand Court have made a most brilliant show. The territory surrounding the Service Building has also been very attractive. Some thousands of shrubs have been planted in many parts of the grounds. The banks of the canals have also been planted with groups here and there of willows, and hundreds of drooping plants are planted on the margins. The asphalting was begun about ten days ago, and soon every inch of main road and esplanade will be covered with this smooth pavement.

If the rain and snow have been any hindrance to the work, it seems to have been most beneficial to the grass and the spring flowering plants, which in many parts of the grounds are at present very gay. The Rose Garden is now one of the most attractive parts of the whole grounds. In it are situated all the beds devoted to exhibits, in round figures about 200. H. A. Dreer planted a large number with bulbs last fall. Six large beds of tulips at the Elmwood entrance, planted by F. R. Pierson, are now a brilliant mass of bloom. Messrs. Dreer, C. Eisele of Philadelphia, and Denys Zirngiebel, of Needham, Mass., have also some fine beds of pansies. The 4,000 hardy roses planted last summer as an exhibit by Ellwanger & Barry, of Rochester, and Nelson Bogue, of Batavia, have wintered well and are now breaking finely, which assures some grand beds. A large bed of 500 plants of Crimson Rambler roses, the exhibit of F. R. Pierson, are growing finely. This will be a remarkably showy bed.

above there are beds of hyacinths and tulips planted by James Vick's Sons, of Rochester; C. D. Zimmerman, of Buffalo; Orange Clark & Son, of Buffalo; Henry F. Michell, of Philadelphia, and ten beds of Spanish Iris, the exhibit of Clucas & Boddington, of New York. Messrs. Parsons & Son, of Flushing, N. Y., have an exhibit of Ilex crenata and Japanese maples. The Wm. H. Moon Company, of Morrisville, Pa., have sent a collection of retinosporas which fills a large bed near the Women's building. Many more consignments are on the road.

Ellwanger & Barry have a very large group of deciduous trees and shrubs. Thos. Meehan & Sons, of Germantown, Philadelphia, have a large collection of evergreens in tubs. J. C. Vaughan, of Chicago, has also a number of beds of pansies. C. W. Ward, of Queens, N. Y., has sent a splendid collection of pelargoniums and zonal geraniums, which are now in the North Conservatory. Peter Henderson & Co. have a large space allotted to them and Mr. Julius Heinrich is on the ground with a force of men getting it in fine shape. If carried out acording to their plan it will be a very fine exhibit.

The Whitney-Eckstein Seed Company, of Buffalo, also Henry A. Dreer, have each about a quarter of an acre devoted to lawn grass, which are splendid in quality. An exhibit which may be of great interest to many is a bed of Ginseng planted by the American Ginseng Company of Rose Hill, N. Y. They have also some fine plants of this Chinese favorite started in the greenhouse. All the herbaceous plants, of which there is a great collection planted by Henry A. Dreer, the Park Floral Company, of Denver, and several others, have come through the winter well.

The Mexican government is making a display in several departments and in horticulture they will be quite prominent. They have four large beds devoted to their exhibits, chief of which will be a great display of cacti. It is under the charge of Mr. McDowell of Mexico City.

Too much cannot be said of the beauty of this part of the grounds, which covers some fifteen acres interspersed with trees and flower beds, good roads and a velvety lawn. To the south of this rose garden is the Buffalo Park, with its fine landscape gardening.

The Exposition management sent to Florida our Mr. H. E. Van Deman, who has sent home some very large cocoanut trees, which are now boxed and placed in the center of the Horticulture building. He also sent what is quite as acceptable, a large collection of agaves, many Mexican orchids and a splendid assortment of tillandsias, which will be used to great advantage in the decorations of the conservatories.

The Geo. Wittbold Company, of Chicago, sent a fine collection of their decorative fern, Nephroplepis Wittboldii. A fine collection of pineapples have arrived from Florida, some in flower, some with fruit half grown and some near maturity. These arrived in excellent order. In the main Horticulture building many of the States are installing their exhibits. California has a magnificent display. Every inch of this fine building will be occupied. The states already in are Michigan, Connecticut, Missouri, Illinois and the Province of Ontario, and more just arriving. I am glad to say that most of the States are not only putting up handsome structures for their exhibits, but are embellishing them with growing plants. California is particularly lavish with palms and orange trees. Missouri also has a fine lot of palms.

The Carnation Exhibition.

As advertised, a carnation exhibition was held from May 1st to the 8th. The flowers were staged in the large Horticulture building, which without any artificial heat kept very cool and the blooms have lasted longer and in better condition than the writer ever remembers having seen elsewhere. Many additions to the exhibits were made on Saturday, but six days after the first blooms were staged the majority were yet in excellent condition and the quality of the flowers was a revelation to many visitors who saw them on the opening day. Florists are, of course, acquainted with the wonderful varieties sent out this and last year, but the public were not aware of the extraordinary size and beauty of many of the newer varieties. The flowers came from many sections of the country, and, without giving you a list of all the exhibitors, I will say that the varieties which showed up in fine style were J. H. Manly (a grand scarlet), Gov Roosevelt, Morning Glory, Mrs. Lawson, The Marquis, Golden Beauty, Olympia, Cressbrook, Rosy Morn, Genevieve Lord, Mary Wood (extra fine), Leslie Paul, Mrs. Bradt, Gen. Gomez, Frances Joost, Goethe (a beautiful light pink), Norway, White Cloud, Flora Hill, Mrs. J. J. Shedd (a grand scarlet), 100 blooms of Enquirer (greatly admired and a great keeper), and many other of the well known older varieties. The carnation exhibition was a success, and as there were 26,000 people on the grounds the first day you can imagine that this exhibition gave pleasure to many.

Though not horticulture I would like to say that beautiful as this Exposition is in daylight when the coloring of the buildings can be seen, to me there is a charm about it when lighted with its 350,000 electric lights that is beyond description. The Electric Tower is possibly a sight that has never been equaled. On it are over 40,000 electric lights. When seen close by you can see the wonderful designs in which the lights are arranged, but when at some distance it is one gorgeous blaze of light.

The carnation exhibit was not entirely competitive. Following is a list of the awards for the first two days. Some splendid flowers have since arrived from C. W. Ward, the Chicago Carnation Company, Fred Dorner & Sons and H. Weber & Sons, Oakland, Md. The result of the later awards I have not yet received. Prof. John F. Cowell acted as judge.

GOVERNMENT SEEDS.

Evidently as the result of the vigorous protests of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League the following orders have been issued by the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington:

April 24, 1901.

General Order No. 40.

During the absence of the secretary all correspondence relating to the congressional distribution of seed shall be referred for attention to Mr. Beverly T. Galloway, director of plant industry, Department of Agriculture, who is hereby given authority to attend to all matters relating to the final settlement of the distribution for 1900-1901. He is required to make thorough investigation of all matters pertaining to the distribution by the contractor during the present year, and especially regarding his compliance with every feature of the contract entered into with the department of agriculture for furnishing, packing, and distributing seeds through congressmen and the department. He will make full and complete report, so that it may be in evidence when final settlement is made with the contractor.

[Signed] JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

April 24, 1901.

General Order No. 41.

It is hereby ordered that until July 1, 1901, all matters pertaining to the contract for seed to be entered into with the Phillips Seed and Implement Company, for the congressional distribution of 1901-1902, shall be in charge of Mr. Beverly T. Galloway, director of plant industry, Department of Agriculture.

After the 1st of July, 1901, when the law creating the bureau of plant industry goes into effect, all matters pertaining to the congressional distribution of seed, including the control of the employees of the seed division, shall be in charge of Mr. Beverly T. Galloway, chief of the bureau of plant industry.

[Signed] JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Howard M. Earl, with Messrs. W. Atlee Burpee & Co., sends us the following interesting note regarding government seeds:

"Having received several packages of seed from our congressman, Hon. Irving P. Wanger, I have carefully weighed many of the different packets and compared them with the specified requirements of the Department of Agriculture issued January 27, 1900, when bids were asked for on the contract now being executed. These requirements are identical with those issued by the Department November 20, 1900, as to weight of seed in the packets and also with subsequent lists republished and bearing date as late as March 30, 1901, and are, consequently, the official standard for the seeds now in hand. The figures arrived at are as follows:

"Cucumber averages 64 grains; should be 87½ grains, which makes a difference on each packet of 23½ grains, or on the total quantity, of 2,737,280 packets, a difference of 9,189 lbs.

"Lettuce averages 49 grains; should be 54 11-16 grains, making a difference of 5 11-16 grains, or on the total quantity of 2,737,280 packets, 2,224 lbs.

"Watermelon averages 52 grains; should be 87½ grains, making a difference of 35½ grains, or on the total quantity of 2,737,280 packets, 13,281 lbs.

"Peas average 2 2-3 ozs.; should be 3 11-15 ozs.; difference of 1 1-15 ozs., or on the total quantity of 1,184,400 packets, 1,410 bushels.

"Figuring at a rough estimate on the quantities which I state are short I find that they have a value of $6,143.47 or, if I am to think that the shortages as shown on these varieties run the same on the other vegetables it makes an average net gain of $1,535.86 on each variety and, as there are thirteen classes of vegetables, allows a net gain to the contractor, on account of short weight, of $19,966.18.

"This does not include any gain that might have been made from shortage in grass, tobacco, cotton and the flower seeds. The fact that the contractor has been allowed to use any variety in the several different classes instead of any one named sort adds another large sum. Taking the matter of Prize Taker onion alone, there is a difference on this item, if you were to use, say, the Yellow Danvers instead, of over $2,000.

"American Wonder peas, if used, would have cost him over $2,400, while a cheaper substitute could be bought for about $1,000. Taking the whole list through item by item, I find that the total amount to be saved in this way is over $30,000. Adding this to the $19,966.19 named above for short weights you have a round sum of $50,000 as the value of the privilege obtained by the contractor of using 'Selected Varieties,' and short weights, even if all the seeds are of good germinating quality, properly packed, and sent out on time, and full count, which are questions not raised in this discussion. The above sum of $50,000 cannot be considered as otherwise than irregular and over and above the legitimate profits of executing such a contract. When it is considered that the amount of the contract is $108,000 the percentage becomes interesting."

FLORAL TRIBUTES AT THE FUNERAL OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

The majority of the designs were by Green, of Crawford street, and Solomon, of Piccadilly, two of London's leading florists, and may safely be taken to represent the highest development of the art in the capital and metropolis of the British Empire, as the occasion was one to call forth their very best thought and effort.

Helena, Mont.—Land has been purchased here upon which it is understood that J. H. Mitchell, of Butte, will build a range of greenhouses costing $30,000 to $40,000.

Clifton, N. J.—Geo. Young is building two houses 35x350 for American Beauties.

Trade Conditions.

We have not even yet been allowed sun enough to warm things into normal spring conditions. Has anything been overplentiful, except possibly the lilies, until Saturday, the 4th? Upon that day there seemed to be a slight inclination to congestion of the market, mostly caused by an increase in the carnation output. Prices were variable throughout the week, but averaged very well for the time of year, and a great many blossoms changed ownership. Quality since the advent of a little sunshine has been very good indeed.

The lack of variety of flowers used in this city is now quite marked, as bulb goods are getting quite scarce, as is also anything in the line of small white flowers, a little spirea being about all in that line to be found. The Liberty rose is again on its feet and coming in very freely, some of them nearly three feet long. Like Longfellow's little girl, when they are good they are "very, very good," but when they are bad there are none. Incidentally red roses suddenly became very plentiful on the Saturday already spoken of, caused by a falling off in the demand.

Various Items.

The editor of the REVIEW has kindly asked me what I think of all this talk about an employees' association, with a request to think over its possibilities for good and give his type a chance at it.

Now, I did not know there was any talk about such an association and really can see but little need of one so far as New England is concerned. Understanding that a national affair is under consideration, I have an idea it might prove a detriment to this section by getting some of our best workers too much interested in positions outside of their natural bailiwick. This, of course, might prove of advantage to individual employees even if against the best interests of our community at large.

Of course the purpose of such an organization would be to forward the interests of the employee and might be construed as against those of the employer, whether actually so or not. Then the society of the little white metal leaf would have to lock horns with it.

I do not know just what the legitimate functions of this labor trust might be outside of keeping run of good positions and a line of men to fill them, a possible assistanee to members in contention with unjust employers and a standing inducement to all workmen to train themselves up to the standard of requirements for such membership; the latter would seem to be its most commendable feature, as well as its broadest field of operation. New England has too many floral employees unfitted for recommendation, but everything here is too scattered and on too small a scale to be systematized, it seems to me. And, too, our co-operative market, with its efficient and accommodating manager, takes the place of all this very nicely, so far as Boston and a twenty or thirty mile radius is concerned. Also, in this day of colossal consolidation the next thing to do is to Morganize labor as a whole, irrespective of special trades, isn't it?

Away back in heathen literature somewhere there is a sublime little story-ette about a man digging around in the mud while all the time a crown hangs suspended over his head for him to occupy any time he sees fit to straighten up and fill it. The second ease has just come to light. One of nature's noblemen has been engaged in the plebeian labor of shipping roses and pinks when stern Justiee points at him and says, "Eeee homo; stand up and occupy thy crown." Jack Minton is on jury duty for two weeks. Now, ye florists, who have broils and imbroglios, bring them forth! Hast imbibed of the cup that both cheers and inebriates? Hast thou stolen thy neighbor's sheep or looked with lust upon anything that is his? Come to this fount of justice and be free! It is just the legal situation for which lots of us have been looking.

Statisticians tell us that our death rate has been low during our long spell of bad weather, but there surely has been an alarming amount of sickness among the florists, the ease of Mr. Woodward, of South Framingham, being the only one, so far as I know, resulting fatally.

The last arrival upon the sick list was F. M. Wood, of Natiek, who was critically ill with nervous affection, coupled with weak action of the heart, for two or three weeks. His improvement is now very rapid and has been for a week or more.

The demolition of old Horticultural Hall began upon schedule time, May 1, and the building now looks much like Admiral Cervera's fleet when Sampson and the other giants got through with it.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There was a sudden change to cooler weather the latter part of last week, but the supply seems not to have been lessened by the change and prices are still very easy. Tea roses are still quoted at $4 to $6, but very few indeed are sold at the top figure, and some exeellent stock has gone begging when offered at $4, especially Brides, which do not move as well as Maids. The great bulk of the good stock is sold at from $2 to $4, and the ordinaries are jobbed off at $1 to $2, and even lower.

Beauties seem to have suffered more than the teas from the season of summer heat, and good ones are very scarce. The few really first-class ones bring $3 a dozen, but $2 to $2.50 is more of a quotable figure, and from that they grade down to $1 per hundred or per bale, as may happen.

Carnations, especially the colored ones, show the effects of the heat badly. A very few extra fancy still bring $3, but good fancy go at $1.50 to $2, and really nice flowers can be had for $1.50, while Scotts, etc., sell at 75 cents to $1. And a buyer who will clean up a mixed lot can get figures as low as 40 cents a hundred.

Lilies and bulbous flowers are still very slow. Fine Poet's narcissus that sold well last year goes begging for a customer at any price this season. Too many cheap roses and carnations to be had. Arbutus seems to be in the same class.

What little demand there is comes from outside points. Local demand is practically dead. It is the moving season, and this always deadens local demand.

Club Meeting.

At the meeting of the florists' Club last Friday evening the entertainment committee, consisting of Edgar Sanders, P. J. Hauswirth and E. F. Winterson, was instructed to arrange for a picnic some time in June or July. Mr. J. P. Sinner, of the firm of Sinner Bros., was elected to membership. Mr. Paul Kopanka responded favorably to a request for a paper and will read one upon cyclamens at the next meeting (May 17). The secretary was instructed to communicate with those on the printed program who had not yet read their essays and endeavor to have as many as possible ready for the next meeting. The secretary presented his apologies for failure to get out notices for the last two meetings and promised better for the future.

The transportation committee reported having issued a circular letter regarding the Buffalo trip as per instructions given at the previous meeting, but that it was too early to report results. The letter will be found printed elsewhere in this issue. The club hopes for a general and early response.

Various Items.

Kennicott Bros. Co. had a fire scare last Saturday. The place became entirely filled with smoke, and as its source could not be discovered crossed electric wires was suspected. The fire department was called and the firemen discovered that the smoke was coming in from an adjoining basement in which a pipe connecting a boiler with the chimney had become disjointed. There was a good deal of excitement before this discovery was made and the street was filled with fire apparatus.

A good many changes are now taking place in the wholesale section. Weiland & Risch are already established in their new place in the basement, while Benthey & Co. have taken the corner position and will be installed by the time this appears in print. They will have much more space than before. The Poehlmann Bros. Co. have taken the place leased by John Muno in the basement and have also secured the adjoining space, giving them much larger quarters, and Mr. Muno will take the place they now occupy on the second floor. This building will be occupied very largely by wholesale florists.

J. F. Kidwell & Bro. have bought the place formerly conducted by John Blanck on 43d street and will continue it as a branch of their Wentworth avenue establishment.

One of Mr. John Muno's daughters was married last Tuesday to a Mr. Phillips.

Heavy rain fell here last Monday night, but suburban places only a few miles west were not favored. And they needed rain, too.

John Mangel's window was particularly attractive last week. The short stemmed flowers were in the center and the heights graded gracefully up each side, while in the center was a tall, slender vase of Beauties. The colors were well harmonized, sufficient green was used to avoid any glaring effects, and the form combinations were excellent. That it was appreciated by the people was evidenced by the number attracted to it.

Mr. N. A. Schmitz, of the Guardian Angel Orphan Asylum, will decorate the Auditorium for the forthcoming Catholic convention.

T. J. Corbrey has sold his business on West Madison street to H. N. Bruns. Mr. Bruns took possession at once, but will retain his old place also until his lease expires next July. Mr. Corbrey has moved to Oak Park. He will spend the summer in Wisconsin and in the fall will go to California for a long stay.

The prizes offered by the Tribune for best gardens, window boxes, etc., this summer, have very considerably stimulated the sales of the seedsmen and florists.

Geo. Dolinski has been convicted of the murder of Anton Lisle and has been sentenced to death. Lisle was employed at the greenhouses of Brant & Noe, Forest park, and was waylaid and murdered one evening on his way home. Mrs. Lisle was considered indirectly the cause of the tragedy.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. recently made shipments of their new fern and other plants to England, Germany and Denmark.

Mrs. Thadon has closed her store on 41st street and has returned to Cincinnati.

Chas. Probst has bought the store business of John Venson at 39 State street.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Holton, Milwaukee, were recent visitors.

The tulips are now in gorgeous bloom at the parks.

A. L. Vaughan was confined to the house by illness for some time, but is now about again. He will soon leave for New York and will probably remain east for a couple of months.

Bowling.

The "League Games" were started with great eclat and much enthusiasm last Tuesday evening at Worden's alleys and three hot games were served up, all effectively garnished with noise enough to wake the dead. Ed. Winterson's yell at each strike made by members of his team was undoubtedly heard in St. Louis, New York and Buffalo and must have had a terrifying effect on the bowlers of those cities. The scores (which are not so terrifying) follow. The Growers win from the Retailers and the Wholesalers win from the Seedsmen. The games will be continued at the same place each Tuesday night.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

There is an excessive supply of all kinds of flowers and the local trade seems to have died out all of a sudden. The wholesalers say that never before was there such an oversupply in this market. But there are indications that the supply will soon decrease, as much of the stock shows the weakening effects of the hot weather.

Roses, generally, are soft and suffer in color, too. Some of the best Beauties sold as low as $2 and $3 per doz.; some good Beauties as low as $1.50 per doz. and from that down to $1.50 per 100. Other roses sold at $1.50 to $3 per 100 for select stock; in large lots at $10 per 1,000 and from that down to $6 per 1,000. Carnations are extremely plentiful, more so than roses, and stock can hardly be given away. General stock, 50 cents per 100; selected fancies, from $1 to $2. They are suffering from the heat and a great many come in badly bleached. The wholesale men claim they had to get rid of them at $4 and $5 per 1,000 and plenty, even at this price, went to the dump pile. The retailers downtown are selling them at 10 and 15 cents per doz. Violets are about out of the market; only a few from the south come in and they don't sell. Sweet peas, too, have taken a drop to 10 and 35 cents per 100 and the market is overstocked with them also. Harisii lilies are down to $4 and $5 in hundred lots; callas the same, though like everything else they go slowly.

Outdoor stock is swamping the market: lilac is overflowing the wholesaler. Bulb stock is also a drug; good valley is coming in and sells at $2. In greens, ferns are again in the market and the wholesalers say there is no lack of anything except buyers.

Trade at Union Market has improved greatly and plenty of stuff is sold every day.

Notes.

Henry Schnell formerly with the Michell Plant and Bulb Co., has for the past few months been with Max Herzog. Mr. Schnell has the making of a good man for just such a place as Herzog's. He will have full charge of the place, assisted by Miss Martha Herzog, while Max and his wife are away this summer.

Mrs. Eugene Wurst left Friday night to join her husband in New York. Mr. Wurst is now employed as foreman at Siebrecht & Son's place.

The Engleman Botanical Club gave a free exhibition of wild flowers, this being the fifth annual. The exhibition was opened at noon Saturday on the fourth floor of the Board of Education building. The flowers were gathered last Friday, by 100 members of the club, in the woods and fields near the city. A large crowd was present to view the exhibition, which was pronounced a success.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

It will be well not to dwell at length on the cut flower market this week. There is little activity. Prices are uncertain and stock is not easy to move; even carnations are affected. Still business is generally poor in May; June will be better.

The street men are important factors just now. They offer a dozen very nice carnations for the modest consideration of 15 cents and other equally fetching bargains. The old adage, "When Greek meets Greek," is often applied to a particularly fierce battle. This may apply to our industry, as it is rumored that some of these venders think their competitors are spoiling the business and propose to keep them out of it. As far as can be learned no steps have yet been taken in this direction. Some of the commission men think an association of street men would be a good thing and help maintain prices, while others wash their hands of the whole matter.

The Philadelphia Times in a recent article puts a different light on this matter, stating that the street men's organization is determined to force the commission men to sell them only fresh flowers and not those that have been a week or more in cold storage on the pain of being boycotted. The object of publicity being to agitate the matter as one of general interest among buyers. It is not likely that the commission men can yield to this demand except at certain times, as the stock sold to the Greeks is always at less than cost of production.

Various Items.

The novelty in the plant line is Robert Craig & Sons' house of hybrid calceolarias, which are very fine. They are grown in bench and in 7-inch pots, showing a great variety of color. The plants are moving quickly at from $1 to $2.50 each.

James Burrows, a well known and respected florist of Germantown, is dead. Mr. Burrows was in business with his two sons on Wakefield street. He had a good trade, chiefly in bedding plants, and was especially interested in geraniums, having helped to popularize many of the leading sorts.

The bedding plant business has opened briskly and indications point to a lively season. In geraniums, Le Pilote and S. A. Nutt are the leading scarlets. There are some fair pinks about, but a really first-class one is needed; will Jean Viaud fill the bill? The average price for geraniums is 7 cents for 4-inch stuff, which is enough if they are fine. There are some nice verbenas about in 4-inch pots at 8 cents, which appear to take better than the 3-inch.

Theodore Leissig, 3420 Frankford avenue, has a well grown collection of bedding plants, including geraniums, ageratums and in fact almost everything that is in demand.

The Floral Exchange have their new range of houses ready for glazing. These houses are supposed to be the palace of the Queen of Edgely.

Some of the retailers are complaining that they cannot get the pot roses they want because the growers have sold them to the department stores. The early bird gets the worm every time, gentlemen.

George Anderson is going to plant a house of Liberty this season.

Robert Craig & Sons have just planted a house of the rose Marquise Litta.

Stephen Mortensen has already cleaned up three-quarters of his young roses. They were certainly very well done.

John Savage has been experimenting with white snapdragon as a cut flower.

J. W. Colflesh has his specialty, bedding plants, in full swing now. His double petunias and Phlox Drummondii are very fine. He also has nice Pyrethrum aureum and geraniums of Bruant type, besides a general line of this class of stock.

Samuel J. Bunting has tried grafted and own root Brides and Maids and prefers the former. This is not, however, the general feeling here. The majority of our growers seem to prefer own root stock, although there is a strong minority for the grafted plants.

The seedsmen are rushed with work now; their stores are busy places.

A house fell in last Saturday morning right in front of William J. Baker's commission house. Fortunately no one was injured. The accident was due to the foundation being undermined by an adjoining excavation.

The Florists' Club meeting was held on Tuesday evening at Horticultural Hall. Robert B. Cudlund, of Thomas Meehan & Sons, Germantown, read a paper on landscaping as a part of the florist's business.

The fifth Ladies' Night at the club will take place on Wednesday, May 15. It will be the first of these entertainments to begin in the afternoon at 4 o'clock, continuing throughout the evening. The committee, of which John Westcott is chairman, have issued a neat program. There will be bowling, shuffle boards, refreshments and good company. It is hoped each member will come and bring both maid and matron with him.

It is sad to be referred to as the author of a paragraph which while intended to cheer our comrade gave pain in quite an unexpected quarter. Perhaps some day persistent endeavor will create a great essay on outdoor watering or something else that is really clever.

BUFFALO.

I don't think business has been much accelerated by Pan-American visitors as yet. At least not our business. But it has been quite good and no surplus of flowers. There have been but two warm days this spring and everything is late outside. Outside tulips are just opening; carnations are still fine and more plentiful, glad to say. Roses are very fine. Mr. C. Guenther, of Hamburg, began cutting his first crop of Kaiserin two or three weeks ago and they are A No. 1 flowers.

Our markets are loaded with plants. As usual the people who have a few geraniums in flower rush them off to the market and if they sell at a good price who can blame them? It is quite certain that there cannot possibly be a surplus this year for everything that will adorn a garden will be wanted. There have been so many visitors in town this past week that I cannot possibly remember them all and am thinking of starting a registry of all who visit the Horticultural office at the Pan-American. There was Mr. Huston and Mr. Gray of Toronto, Mr. Julius Roehrs of Rutherford, Mr. Wadley of New York, Mr. Krick of Brooklyn, who is an exhibitor, Robert Kift, who is also an exhibitor in the Bazaar building; and attending the first day's exhibition of carnations, the opening day of the Exposition, we had Mr. Gammage of London, L. E. Marquisce of Syracuse, C. Guenther of Hamburg, and the manager of Mr. John H. Dunlop's retail store. I know I have missed some and they must excuse me for I have had several things to think about of late.

The Carnation Exhibition was a decided success and has interested thousands. The list of exhibits and exhibitors will be found under Pan-American notes. I will say here that several firms have most generously sent on a second shipment, arriving on Saturday and today, Monday, and from present appearances the show will be an attraction every day it was advertised. You hear a little grumbling from people who find the grounds and buildings yet incomplete, but they are in the minority and I take more stock in the impression that it makes on the men in our own business, who certainly have an eye for the beautiful. The Marquis of Syracuse as he stood at the base of the Electric Tower with its 40,000 lights and listened to the music exclaimed, "This is Fairy Land; I want to see the Midway." Mr. Huston of Toronto, who spent three weeks at the World's Fair, said, "This is far more beautiful," and Brother Kift said, "I am astounded with its grandeur." D. J. Scott left on Thursday for a few days in Philadelphia in search of some plants for papa. W. S.

Rochester, N. Y.—Peter Kane, who has been employed by Ellwanger & Barry for forty years, died April 25.

Worcester, Mass.—E. Rathbun will open a floral store at the corner of Pleasant and Severs streets.

Reading, Pa.—C. Getz, the florist, who suffered considerable loss through the falling of an adjoining wall on one of his greenhouses shortly before Easter, has brought suit for damages against the owner of the wall that fell.

"A Most Valuable Decorative Fern."

Philadelphia, Feb. 2, 1901.

The Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen: We are much pleased with the Nephrolepis Wittboldii; the specimen plant which you recently sent shows the character of the plant very nicely. Its bold heavy foliage, which is made to appear very light and graceful by the wavy edge, should make this a most valuable decorative fern, for which there is room alongside the Boston fern.

We see no reason why the plant should not become just as popular as this valuable variety.

Gentlemen: Please ship to me as soon as possible 300 more of your Nephrolepis Wittboldii.

The plants I received from you a short time ago are doing so nicely that the more I see of them the more I am convinced that Wittboldii is the Great Fern of the Future, and I feel I cannot get too heavy a stock.

And I know that every enterprising florist will purchase a stock of it as soon as he sees what a grand decorative plant it will make. Wishing you a prosperous New Year, I remain. Yours truly, A. J. BALDWIN.

BANANAS.

Bananas planted now or the north grow 8 or 10 feet high by winter, when they can be dug, placed in cellar until spring. Then reset and they bear in time to grow, and produce an indescribably beautiful bloom, which lasts 4 to 6 weeks, and is sometimes followed by regular bunches of bananas. They are the most tropical in appearance and yet the most easily and quickly grown of all plants. To reduce surplus for next 30 days will mail good bulbs for 15c; doz. for $1.00. ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held at their rooms in Orange, Wednesday, May 1. The date of the society's fall show was fixed for November 12 at the Orange Armory. It was decided to admit all children free, charging ten cents for adults. Treasurer MacRorie reported donations of money for the special children's work from Messrs. John Crosby Brown, Richard Colgate and Mrs. John Burke, of Llewellyn Park, bringing the amount to sixty-five dollars to date.

Cash prizes were decided upon of from fifty cents to five dollars, amounting to twenty-seven dollars and fifty cents. Upon the treasurer stating that this might cause the amount to exceed the amount subscribed, the society authorized the executive committee to draw upon the treasury for any deficit caused by distribution of plants to the children. The application from the Orange Orphans' Home for permission to compete was favorably acted upon.

A committee consisting of George Smith, J. B. Davis, Malcolm MacRorie was appointed to frame resolutions expressing the sentiments of the society in regard to wanton destruction of trees by telephone and telegraph companies on our streets, with a view to quicken the street committees of the town council to a sense of their duties and to arouse public attention to the facts.

In the absence of speakers J. B. Davis displayed the colored plates of Brooke's folio work on the "Gardens of England." A spirited discussion upon the merits of English vs. Scotch landscape gardening followed. J. B. D.

WASHINGTON.

Business is at present very quiet, funeral work being about all that is doing aside from a few small weddings. Outdoor flowers are coming in, lilac being in its prime now.

O. A. C. Oehmler, whose store was destroyed by fire, has decided not to reopen same and is devoting his attention to shipping outdoor flowers north.

J. Louis Loose has leased a large store at corner of 13th and F streets and will be ready for the fall opening. He will have the finest stand in the city.

Lilies seem to be still a glut, with 75 cents a dozen signs hanging on them in the market.

The first pæonies came in Monday. The parks are getting in shape and the city in general looks fine. The only thing lacking is the society people, who are out of town.

From present indications Washington will be well represented at the S. A. F. meeting. G. I. C.

CLEVELAND.

Business seems to be very quiet with all the florists. The only decorations were the opening of the Scott's Dry Goods Company, the floral features of which were arranged for by Smith & Fetters, and the opening of a new carpet house, which made a good display of both plants and flowers; this was done by the Gasser Company. Another was an opening of fine carriages, and Mrs. Ella G. Wilson saw to the floral features.

We have to chronicle the passing of Peter Herke, the oldest florist in the city. He was 79 years old at the time of his death. The funeral was held at the home of his son, Fred Herke, last Thursday; interment was in Riverside cemetery. Mr. Herke was one of the old school florists, but of late years had not been in business.

The Florists' Club is meeting regularly and is gaining in interest and membership. Much interest is taken in bowling and the "free trip to Buffalo" prize is spurring the bowlers to do their best. W.

CHICAGO TO BUFFALO.

The Chicago Florists' Club has instructed the committee appointed to arrange for transportation to the convention of the Society of American Florists at Buffalo next August, to issue an announcement to the members and the trade in general that it hopes to secure especially advantageous terms and accommodations this year and that the larger the party the better the chances of securing the greatest consideration from the transportation lines.

The annual convention of the S. A. F. and the Pan-American Exposition combined will no doubt prove a great drawing card and the attendance will unquestionably be large.

If it could be known definitely in advance just about how many will compose the party from Chicago, so the committee could name an approximate number with some degree of certainty, it would materially strengthen them in their efforts to secure the largest possible concessions.

Will you therefore notify the committee—

First—Whether you are reasonably certain of attending the convention and intend traveling with the club's special party?

Second—Whether you hope to join the party but are uncertain of being able to do so?

Third—Whether you have made up your mind that you cannot attend this year?

Please address reply to any one of the committee as below.

Trade Items.

Generally speaking, trade is not what might be expected at this season of the year. The sudden change of temperature Easter week, from a cold, raw "norther" to almost midsummer heat, and which apparently has come to stay, has had a demoralizing effect both on the cut flower trade and quality of stock. Surely, the growers ought to feel satisfied with the past winter's business; they were able to demand their own price, and there has been a steady demand for everything salable.

Cut flowers are more plentiful, with roses rather in oversupply. The best can be bought for $3 and $5 per 100. There are none too many carnations; they retail from 30 to 50 cents per dozen; violets were a favorite to the finish.

Ed. Bunyar and Alfred Broman, of Independence, Mo., had great success with a late crop of violets. A shipment received here as late as May 1 was of excellent quality.

We have had very little springlike weather and no rain in three weeks, which proved disastrous to early vegetation and outside bulbous stock. Last year the display of tulips on the "Paseo" was a glorious sight and attracted thousands of visitors, but this year the display is disappointing.

One of our enterprising department stores has been experimenting with the cut flower business since Easter. Large shipments of roses of an inferior grade were received daily and advertised as choice stock for 50 cents per dozen. A thriving business was done for a few days with the unsuspecting mortals both in and out of town, but the venture was short-lived. Some people are wiser, and the florist probably the most benefited in the outcome.

Visitors the past week were: A spruce looking young man, W. H. Danman by name, from Pleasant Hill, Mo., who was on his way to Colorado Springs to fill a position with Mr. Clark of that place; Wm. Wirt, of Parsons, Kan., who was looking for greenhouse material to increase his plant the coming summer, and a representative of the Dayton Paper Novelty Company, Dayton, O.

We have sold this season 75,000 disbudded long stem flowers of this great commercial White Carnation at the highest market price and have had only good reports from our customers and not one word of complaint from either commission men, florists or retail customers. You will have to grow this variety if you wish to compete with your neighbor. On our place it produces twice as many flowers as White Cloud or Flora Hill and is a better variety in every respect.

GALVESTON, TEXAS.

I am pleased to be able to report our trade as well as business in general good in this city. Our citizens have bravely recovered from the crushing effects of the terrible disaster our city suffered and one result has been the knitting together in closer relations of those who suffered together. In harmony we look up to those men of our city who in our days of darkness and doubt unselfishly took up the burden of leadership, pointing out the way, leading our people to their work and setting an example by working like slaves themselves. We were soon taught that the solution of our apparently unsolvable problem was hard work and the work has wrought wonders.

Of course there is more talk about oil now than flowers. Still our florist season was as fine as ever. It is almost over now, but the hardest work of the year is ahead of us, for during our hot summer we must get our stock in good shape again for fall business.

Our city is still "The Ocean City." A very few of the oleanders were killed by the storm and you can now see every variety of them in bloom on our sidewalks and in our gardens. Wistarias (especially the blue), pomegranates and Rhynchospermum jasminoides can be found on many places. Also crape myrtles, altheas and many other shrubs, as well as some oak and Umbrella-China trees stood the salt water. As a very usable green we miss the wild peaches very much; they were all killed. Take it all in all our city is looking neat and clean now and almost every family has a garden around the house.

We have a good society here and it was harmony here, too, that brought about the quick recovery and resumption of normal conditions. There is a good demand for flowers here and there are calls for every small occasion. The taste for floral arrangements is general and discriminating, too. One pleasure is that customers are quick to appreciate anything really good and up-to-date and are not only willing to pay a fair price but call in afterward to express their appreciation when they have been pleased. It makes life worth living to do business with such pleasant and appreciative people. Many a one who returned after the storm, probably with doubt as to the wisdom of remaining, could not resist the charms of the city and its society and are here again to stay. They all agree that Galveston is "all right" in spite of the memories of awful disaster.

I send a box of Kaiserin and Testout roses cut from two-year-old plants planted out in our garden in January. Insects, especially worms, are very bad this year. The salt water inundation seems to have agreed with them.

C. E.

[The roses, while showing the effect of their long journey, had kept remarkably well, for outdoor grown blooms, and were good, long-stemmed flowers. Ed.]

Toledo, O.—Henry Crane & Co. have just purchased 215 boxes of glass for their large new house and had to pay $3.60 a box. Last year they bought the same size and grade for $2.50 a box. They feel that the trust is taking too much advantage of the situation.

PREVENTION vs. CURE.

By far the larger part of the progress made in the growing of plants and flowers has been due to the discovery of means of prevention of the action of unfavorable agencies rather than their removal or cure after once obtaining a foothold. The man who discovered that the fumes from sulphur painted on the heating pipes largely prevented the appearance of mildew in rose houses that were otherwise correctly handled really made the production of roses as carried on today a possibility, and he is entitled to a place alongside the man who found out that tobacco would keep greenfly in check.

Nowadays, instead of waiting for the appearance of certain destructive worms we endeavor to kill the adult insects that lay the eggs from which the worms are hatched, and the killing of one adult means the non-appearance of hundreds and sometimes thousands of worms. It is the same as regards fungous pests, and in all these cases the old adage that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure applies with emphasis.

We anticipate great advances along these lines in the future. The way has been clearly pointed out and the wise will travel it as rapidly as possible. And in view of the serious damage frequently done to roses by the eel-worm, that microscopic imp of perdition, we feel sure that sterilizing the soil for rose houses is bound to become universal. It is merely a question of getting it done in the cheapest and most expeditious way.

To this end we reprint in this issue the record of the experiments carried on by the Hatch Experiment Station of the Massachusetts Agricultural College at Amherst, and some observations by others who have given the matter some thought and attention.

We are sure it will pay every grower of roses (especially those who use steam for heating and therefore have steam readily available) to use sterilized soil in at least one house the coming season and note the results compared with the roses in his other houses.

SOIL STERILIZATION.

In our experiments relating to soil sterilization we have tried many methods and found the tile system as used by Galloway cheap, and satisfactory for many purposes, especially when we wish to sterilize the soil in the bed in which the crop is to be grown. Another advantage which it possesses is that it can be used for subirrigating purposes. To ascertain the best method of using tile we arranged them in beds of equal size containing the same amount of similarly prepared earth. The beds were 18 feet long, 30 inches wide and 1 foot deep, and each contained 45 cubic feet of soil suitable for growing cucumbers. Part of the soil had been used previously for cucumbers and tomatoes and was well infested with nematodes, and previous to sterilization it was mixed with fresh horse manure. The beds contained a different number of feet of pipe which were laid in various ways and in each case they were placed about 2 inches from the bottom.

For details concerning the manner of piping see the engraving. Bed (a) was piped with two lengths of tile without any end connection. Bed (b) was piped with three lengths of tile with end connections, thus forming a continuous circuit. Bed (c) was piped with two lengths of tile with end connections and cross tile every two feet. Bed (d) was piped with three lengths of tile as in (b). Each bed was treated separately from a four horse-power portable boiler having a pressure of steam varying from 40 to 80 pounds. The steam was conducted from the boiler through a ½-inch pipe provided with a valve, and this led into a 1-inch pipe which had a four-way connection, the ends of which were inserted into the free open ends of the tile. The connections were easily made with the boiler and when one bed was sterilized it was disconnected and the pipe attached to another bed. The steam was confined by means of boards placed over the top, although straw mats or blankets would have served the purpose better. The valve regulating the amount of steam from the boiler was never turned on more than half way, this being found sufficient to supply all the steam required, and it was, moreover, necessary in using so small a boiler in order to keep the pressure of steam high.

The results of these experiments are as follows:

Bed (a) was heated to 204° F. in 1.15 hours.

Bed (b) was heated to 204° F. in 45 minutes.

Bed (c) was heated to 204° F. in 1 hour.

Bed (d) practically the same as (b).

These experiments show that bed (b) which was piped with three lengths of tile gave the best results, with bed (c) following, and the most unsatisfactory results were given by bed (a). Bed (d) gave practically the same relative results as (b). Bed (b) contained a few more feet of pipe than (c), and more than one-third more than (a), and for this reason alone it might be expected that the heating of the soil in the bed (b) would be more effective. There is another more important difference, however, and that is in the method in which the steam circulated. The cross tiles in (c) were not nearly as effective as the middle lengths in (b), neither would they have been even if they had contained the same linear feet. Bed (a) would have heated more effectually if there had been a continuous loop. Had the four beds been piped the same and all connected at once with a large boiler maintaining a high pressure of steam they could have been heated in two hours' time. The tile which were employed for sterilizing were left in the soil, but in these experiments they were not used for subirrigation purposes. Should the soil, however, be removed and replaced by other soil it would be desirable to remove the tile, which can, however, be easily put back. We have tried many different methods of piping with variations in the pressure of steam and we will state that in order to get the cheapest and best results it is necessary to pay attention to two points, namely, that the higher the pressure of steam maintained, the quicker and more effectual are the results, and the greater the tile area in which the steam has to circulate the quicker it will find its way through the soil and accomplish the sterilization of the same. It is not only necessary that there should be a number of feet of pipe in the soil in order to successfully heat it, but the area of cross sections is equally important.

In regard to the cross section area of the pipe we will relate the results of one of our experiments in trying to sterilize a box of soil with ¾-inch lead pipe made up into a coil of four lengths. This coil had holes in it 2 inches apart and was placed in a box containing 16 cubic feet of earth, which was easily heated in one hour's time when three lengths of 2-inch tile were used and a pressure of 4 or 5 pounds of steam. With the small lead pipe it was found that it was impossible to heat the soil after running it for a number of hours. The method just described is especially adapted to sterilizing soil in the bed where it is subsequently to be used in growing some greenhouse crop subject to nematodes. It should be stated, however, that certain beds are more suitable for this purpose than others. Soil can be more effectually heated in a narrow bed than in a wide one. Many of our cucumber growers raise their plants in a bed 15 or 18 inches wide, 8 to 12 inches deep, and 50 to 100 feet or more in length. Beds approximating these dimensions could be easily heated in a short time at little expense, and in a cucumber house it would be most desirable to construct them after this manner. Not unfrequently, however, cucumber houses are not provided with benches, but the vines are grown directly in the ground soil. In this case should sterilizing become necessary, the earth in which the plants are growing can be separated from the remaining soil by means of 12-inch boards or plank and this bed of earth can be tiled and then treated. The boards or plank arranged in this manner restrict the amount of soil to be treated and prevent contamination from the untreated. In case pots are used, as frequently happens in tomato culture, the earth can be sterilized in a special bed or the pots containing the earth can be placed in a tight box and sterilized, although this latter method is not so practical, as pots take up more room than soil placed in a bed.

For sterilizing small quantities of earth we make use of an ordinary small house boiler which heats our laboratory and seldom indicates more than 3 or 4 pounds pressure of steam. This is connected with a box containing 15 cubic feet of earth, in the bottom of which is buried three lengths of tile supplied with steam from the boiler. With a pressure of 3 or 4 pounds of steam the box can be easily heated to 212 degrees F. in one hour's time and this amount of earth will fill about fifty 10-inch pots. A small bed of this description would be exceedingly convenient for florists in sterilizing earth for such pot plants as cyclamens, etc.

The method of ridding the soil of nematodes where such plants as cucumbers, tomatoes, etc., are sown and where the crop is obtained from the seed offers fewer obstacles than such plants as violets, where transplanting is accomplished by separation, as the latter process necessarily includes taking some of the old soil with the plant. If the violet plants are affected with nematodes it must be clear that the separating and transplanting of the plant into new soil would infest it whether sterilized or not, and result in a crop of sickly plants covered with leaf spots and few flowers. The only method which can be employed at present to control this trouble would be to start cuttings of the violet in sterilized earth, and when the cuttings were ready to transplant to place them either out of doors in some newly turned up land, or land which had not been contaminated with nematode infected manure, or else into earth in the greenhouses which has previously been sterilized.

The manner in which roses are propagated also gives rise to similar obstacles in regard to nematode infection. If the same care is taken in regard to contamination as in violets the nematode problem is one which need give no alarm. Some rose growers in Massachusetts have never been troubled with nematodes. Mr. Montgomery, who possesses considerable skill, knowledge and experience in rose growing, and who has charge of the extensive Waban conservatory at Natick, informs us that they have never been troubled with nematodes upon their roses. They make a practice of using soil composted with cow manure, which is allowed to remain out over winter. There is no doubt that owing to this method of preparing the soil they are able to keep nematodes in check.

Cost of Sterilization.

The expense of sterilizing the soil will largely depend upon one's equipment and the conditions under which it has to be done. If one has a large steam boiler which he uses for heating his houses, then the necessary expenses involved would not be very great. The expense of purchasing tile or steam pipe, if one happens to use such, which in the latter instance would have to be drilled and connected, would be the heaviest to bear. We prefer tile to steam pipe and think they are fully as effective, and then, again, they can be used for subirrigation purposes, a practice which, according to those who have experimented with it, gives beneficial results. On the other hand, if one had to purchase a steam boiler, together with the tile, the first expense might be of some account. The 2-inch tile, however, cost about one cent each, or purchased in quantities somewhat less, and are slightly over one foot in length, and a second-hand steam boiler of 6 or 8 horse-power, giving a pressure of steam equal to 40 or 80 pounds, can be purchased for about $50 or $60, and would answer the purpose for most greenhouse growers. Larger boilers would be better, as they carry more water, a necessary feature in this kind of work, inasmuch as there is considerable water used up in heating owing to the condensation of the steam. The soil in a bench 12 inches deep, 15 inches wide and 80 feet long, or, in other words, 100 cubic feet of soil, in which were placed two lengths of tile 2 or 3 inches from the bottom, could be easily heated in one and one-half to two hours' time. The tile in such a bed, we will say, costs $1.75, and the extra expense for coal would be unimportant. Some further idea of the expense of heating the soil can be obtained from the amount of soil employed and the time required to heat it to 212 degrees F., as ascertained by Galloway and others. According to Galloway, he succeeded in heating about 72 cubic feet of earth in two hours' time. Lodder's beds evidently contained 480 cubic feet of soil, which he heated in three hours, while Rudd's beds contained 600 cubic feet, which he heated in two hours, and, according to Mr. May, he heats 112 cubic feet in one and one-half hours.

Effects of Heating the Soil on the Growth of the Crop.

In the numerous crops of cucumbers, tomatoes and lettuce which we have grown in sterilized earth we have never noticed anything of a detrimental nature, but, on the other hand, a decidedly beneficial effect as the result of sterilization. Not only is this shown in the difference in color which the plants take on, but in an appreciable acceleration of their growth. We have repeatedly run parallel cultures of sterilized and unsterilized soil and have invariably noticed these effects on cucumbers and lettuce. It has long been known among practical gardeners that heating the soil produces beneficial results. Every greenhouse soil contains humus or vegetable mold, and it is recognized by vegetable physiologists that the presence of humus in the soil plays an important part in assimilation and plant growth, but its efficiency depends partly upon the stage of decomposition at which it has arrived. It has been shown by experiments in which plants are treated in one case with humus in the raw condition, and in the other with humus which had been subjected to the action of steam for several hours at a temperature of 212 degrees F., that there is considerable difference in the yield of the crop. It has been found that the same quantity of soil, after the action of heat, yields a crop many times in excess of the former or untreated soil. In other words, by heating we convert the humus compounds in the soil into a more available form for the utilization of the plant. That the heating of the soil gives rise to some changes is shown by its darker color and more porous condition, and it is undoubtedly due to these changes which have taken place in the humus compounds which account for the accelerated and vigorous growth of the plants. Another feature which is characteristic of sterilized soils is the unusual occurrence of humus loving plants, or saprophyds, that grow upon it, which is a good indication that the organic matter contained in the soil has undergone changes through the action of the heat. We have ourselves observed more than once certain species of saprophytic fungi growing upon our steamed beds which have never shown any tendency to grow on unheated soil, although, with the exception of being steamed, the soil was exactly the same as that upon which they never appeared.

Wreath Sent to the Funeral of Queen Victoria by Mrs. Garfield.

Effects of Heating the Soil Upon Other Greenhouse Pests.

Besides the destruction of nematode worms, and the gaining of robust and vigorous plants which steaming the soil gives rise to, there are other beneficial effects worthy of being taken into consideration. Many of the fungous and insect pests to which our greenhouse plants are subject find their normal habitat in the soil. In our experiments upon heating the soil in the beds we killed thousands of red spiders, and we presume that we did the same with the cucumber aphis, or with the eggs, as we were remarkably free from them, although the soil had previously been used for cucumber crops, which were badly contaminated with aphis. This latter statement, however, in regard to killing the aphis, is nothing more than a conjecture, as entomologists tell us that they do not know where the aphis breeds, but they surmise that it breeds upon particles of organic matter in the soil or upon the old cucumber vines thrown out upon the compost heap. The soil undoubtedly harbors many of the spores of the mildews which are common to cucumbers, tomatoes and lettuce.

One of the most common and troublesome diseases to young cucumbers is the so-called "damping fungus," Pythium De Baryanum, which attacks the young plants at the surface of the ground and causes them to wilt and collapse. We have repeatedly found as a result of heating that this did not make its appearance when they were subjected to a temperature which was over 140 or 150 degrees F.; when, however, the temperature went below these points the fungus appeared to be accelerated in its growth and development and damping was more likely to show itself than in normal pots. This fungus must be distinguished from the ordinary "damping fungus" (Botrytis) which attacks begonia cuttings, etc., in the propagating pit. Sterilizing the soil for this fungus would be of no account, as the spores (conidia) of this species are everywhere and only await a favorable opportunity to germinate and develop themselves, whereas with the Pythium the conditions of dissemination are much more restricted. What is true in regard to the Botrytis is probably true in regard to some of the mildews, as there is no reason to doubt that the spores can thrive in the house for some time without coming in contact with the host, although sterilizing the soil would undoubtedly kill many of them. The so-called "drop" in the lettuce which is caused by a facutative parasite, a species of Botrytis, is also completely controlled by sterilization. This fungus causes no end of trouble to some lettuce growers and is confined entirely to the soil where it propagates only by means of its mycelium, but it frequently becomes disseminated from one part of the house to the other by means of the gardener's tools. Sterilizing the soil has also an effect upon the weed and grass seeds which constitute more or less of a nuisance in a house. The difference between a heated bed and one that is not heated is very marked indeed in this respect. In the beds which were heated at 204 degrees F. there were no weeds or grass seeds to trouble us and the only things appearing were one or two clover plants. The seeds of the clover appear to be more resistant than other seeds and their presence can be accounted for probably by the fact that the temperature at certain points did not quite reach 204 degrees F. In the beds that were not heated we hoed under a number of crops of weeds as the horse manure which was mixed with our soil was largely contaminated with seeds.

Notes From Other Stations.

Florists should not be led by the article on sterilization of soil in your issue of May 2 to believe that sterilizing the soil will keep it entirely free of nematodes and other soil pests, such as fungi and some species of insects. Some plants, such as begonias, ferns and some geraniums, have their stems and leaves infested with nematodes, and heating the soil would have no effect whatever upon these, even though the cuttings were started in the sterilized soil. In the case of plants which have simply their roots infested with nematodes care must be exercised to grow these, if propagated from cuttings, in sterilized soil. Transplanting them from infested soil to sterilized soil will not help matters. In the case of insects, as well as with nematodes, they are liable to be carried from the field to the benches upon plants grown out of doors. All the above conditions apply to fungi as well, hence heating the soil with the idea of keeping the plants free from insects and fungous troubles is applicable only to plants grown from seed.

The statement that heating the soil will thoroughly renovate it must be considered merely an assumption and should be thoroughly tested before being put into general practice. It is undoubtedly true that sterilizing the soil by means of steam makes the plant food contained in the soil more soluble; at the same time it puts the plant food into condition to be carried away more rapidly by means of water. Furthermore, it has long been considered a bad practice to grow plants a long time in the same soil, no matter what its condition as to fertility.

Notwithstanding the fact that sterilizing the soil by means of steam has proven itself an excellent method not only of keeping plants grown from seed free from nematodes, but also free of "damping off" fungi and "stem-rot," it should be remembered that this does not apply to plants grown from cuttings, or grown in the open field, nor does it prevent the winged adults of cutworms, white grubs and wireworms migrating into the houses and making their headquarters in the sterilized soil. Furthermore, the expense of treating large quantities of soil must not be overlooked. F. A. Sirrine.

Your clipping upon "Sterilized Soil" is received. It seems to me that every word of it is true and wholesome advice. While not carrying out any experiments on a large scale, from lack of opportunity I feel confident that all those who have much glass and serious troubles with root galls caused by nematodes, should give the matter of soil sterilization most serious attention. Byron D. Halsted.

New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station, New Brunswick, N. J.

Replying to your request for my views concerning the sterilization of soil, I would say that I consider the subject well worthy the attention of the commercial grower of greenhouse products. Its feasibility and economical application depends largely upon the equipment of the establishment. In those where steam heat is employed the cost of application would not be so great as in those where hot water is used for heating purposes, as in the latter it would necessitate the purchase of a steam boiler. So far as I am able to learn, wherever the soil has been thoroughly sterilized there has been a decrease of fungous troubles, as well as injury from all worms or nematodes, and, in consequence, a much more vigorous growth of the plants has been obtained.

The sterilization of soil in a box, as mentioned by Mr. W. W. Rawson in a previous issue of your paper, is not an economical method if one has much of it to do. His proposed plan of piping his beds with perforated steam pipes, while perfectly feasible and more economical of labor, is not, in my opinion, as desirable a method as that of using ordinary porous 2 or 3-inch tile. The latter method was first employed by Galloway (Am. Gard., 18, 127, 1897), and later enlarged upon by Messrs. Stone and Smith (Bull., 55, Mass. Agr. Coll. Hatch. Exp. Sta., 51, 1898). In both instances satisfactory results were obtained. The drain tiles are laid in the bench or bed in parallel lines, connected at the ends, a foot to 18 inches apart, and at a depth of from 6 to 12 inches, the latter being dependent upon the depth of soil to sterilize.

One advantage of the tile over that of the perforated steam pipes, claimed by Messrs. Stone and Smith, was that the tile could be used for sub-irrigating purposes and thus made to serve a double purpose. To this I would add that the tile will also serve as conductors of air through the soil, and thus afford better root aeration of the plants, a factor in sub-irrigation of about equal importance to that of the application of water. Hence for this reason and the ease with which the tile may be laid, I prefer the use of tile to that of the steam pipes.

ENGLISH FLORAL WORK.

Last week we gave a group of floral arrangements prepared for the funeral of the late Queen Victoria, but they were reproductions from engravings which had been much reduced from the original photographs and there was but little detail, though giving a general idea of the style of arrangement prevailing among London florists as to funeral designs.

This week we present two plates engraved from photographs we have secured from London at some little trouble and expense, showing two arrangements sent to Her Majesty's funeral by Americans, though of course arranged by London florists.

The first is a wreath sent by the widow of former President Garfield, and it is truly a beautiful arrangement. The way in which the calla lilies are delicately veiled by the asparagus, the use of the croton foliage and smilax sprays and the loose placing of the violets all appeal to us as excellent.

The second engraving is from a large photograph of the huge cross sent by United States Ambassador Choate, regarding which much has been said in the daily press. It certainly contains an immense amount of choice material, but it surely is not representative of American floral art, at least as it exists today. It might serve for a model of what was considered the proper thing twenty years ago. However, the picture is interesting and we have reproduced it with as much detail as possible so the florists of America could judge for themselves as to the merits of this design. The English papers, by the way, refer to all such arrangements as "wreaths," even including this cross under that title.

LANDSCAPE GARDENING AS A PART OF THE FLORISTS' BUSINESS.

By Robert B. Cridland.

(Read before the Philadelphia Florists' Club, May 7, 1901.)

When accepting the honor which your committee conferred in assigning a subject on which to prepare and read a paper before this club, I realized to a degree the difficulty of writing from a business point of view in disregard to those talents that make the "gardening art" a profession rather than a commercial enterprise. Therefore, in hopes of making a more interesting paper, have taken greater latitude than the title implies.

The desire of people to beautify their surroundings has become more general here within recent years than at any other period. We have awakened from the old stereotyped methods, to realize the possibility of design in the adjustment of the house, roads, paths and other adjuncts necessary to the convenience and comforts of the home. We may have utility without sacrificing beauty; every feature is considered as to its particular fitness, and each arranged with regard for the whole.

The house site is selected with consideration for health and beauty; exposure must be bright and sunny, the ground properly drained and the water supply good. Prospect and aspect, the views to those within and those without must be well pleasing to the eye. Roads must be as direct as possible, and conform to the topography; should the grades be rolling and steep, a circuitous drive will be essential to attain an easy ascent. The same may apply to paths; when, however, the ground is comparatively level, long winding roads or paths, with sharp reverses, are in bad taste, and we should not condemn anyone who takes to the turf where such exist. The entrance gates are also to be considered. These should be simple in outline and broad in effect; the piers set at right angles to the drive, and where discrepancies of distance from highway to piers occur the same should be made up in the wing-walls.

The designing of the grounds as regards planting requires considerable thought. Sometimes an entire new scene must be created, while at others it is only necessary to embellish that which already exists. Vistas are to be made by planting, or to be opened by the judicious use of the ax. In either case a thorough knowledge of what nature has used in the building of her landscape is essential. The hills are to be explored to ascertain the various trees and shrubs that exist; also the lowlands and the water's edge. On high elevations will be found the oaks, poplars, maples, ash, chestnuts, pines, junipers and others; this will suggest what to use under sim-lar conditions. Likewise the sweet gum, red maple, magnolias, alders, with others will indicate what to use on low grounds. Close to water we find the willows of various tints of gold and red bark, and the variety babylonica of airy graceful foliage, dipping its branches into the very stream. This is nature's guide, and if followed will give us harmony at least.

Ingenious man, however, is not satisfied with the indigenous, so the catalogue must be increased to numerous importations. Here is an easy channel to err; like the boy with his first box of crayons, we are tempted to use too many varieties, scattering them throughout the plantations with no more serious thought for the combinations of color. The plants should be arranged in harmonious masses, and each located with regard for its particular beauty at different seasons. Nature has given us material in the form of leaf, flower, or fruit with which to decorate the landscape at all seasons, and as the flower of one variety is fading another is appearing, thus it continues until fall, when the foliage assumes its gayest attire: and after the leaves have fallen the fruit and twig still brighten the aspect.

In arranging the masses of color, those at a distance should be larger than those closer to the eye. Clumps of the same colored flowers should not be repeated too frequently, or it will give the appearance of spottiness. On observation we frequently see the lack of judgment in distributing single specimens over the lawn. Recently was counted at least forty plants of spiræa and forsythia on a small place in as many different positions, and all visible from one point. This, as you may imagine, was not very pleasing.

The foregoing refers to the framework of the grounds, and touches only in the most brief manner a few of the many points to be considered by the landsceape gardener. Whether the work be great or small, we must apply the same fundamental principles, judgment and taste. And it would seem that the more familiar the florist becomes with those impulses which inspire to better methods of design in landscape gardening, the more artistic will be those embellishments which are within his province. Whatever we do let it be done with a purpose; if a tree is to be planted for shade, place it where it best serves that end. If the space will not permit of planting one of spreading habit, use one of pyramidal growth.

The planting of many large growing trees on small grounds is not wise, nor should they be placed closer than twenty to twenty-five feet to the house. Never plant a specimen because it is attractive, unless a suitable place can be found for it. Consider ultimate size and the general appearance of the whole. It is better to map out a scheme with system regardless of the rendering of the drawing. A lay-out may be depicted crudely on paper, and yet be highly satisfactory when realized on the ground.

Specimen plants should be isolated, as they are not generally necessary to the picture as a whole. In planting to screen offensive objects, use the hemlock or spruce; as a summer screen privet is better, or vines, the dolichos being particularly useful in making a quick screen over a lattice. We have learned a lesson from the wanton mutilation of street trees by the telegraph and telephone companies, which would suggest, where practicable, to set them back of the building line. Then the leader will be spared at least, and if cutting is found necessary it may be done symmetrically.

When the grounds are small and the straight lines predominate, the flower beds should be located in geometric fashion; what is done on one side must be duplicated on the other. The beds should be placed close to the house or the border planting, for they appear best with a background. Brilliant colors should only be used when they are surrounded with abundance of green and dark shadows. Planting at the base of the house is infinitely better than cutting beds in the turf. When thus treated use only the cleaner, free growing sorts.

Herbaceous plants, as a rule, are not suitable for this purpose, and some varieties are as much out of place as a coleus bed in the woodland. These should be scattered through the shrubberies in borders, along the walks of the vegetable garden, or in a flower garden especially provided, where one may cut at will for indoor decoration. There are exceptions, however, and perhaps all have appreciated the perfect harmony of the larkspur, delphiniums, hollyhocks, peonies and monkshood scattered in a natural manner around the base of a building of the old farm-house type. Vernonias, asters and solidages seem most suited to the borders of the woods.

The demand for perennials is becoming more general, and in a measure they are supplanting many of the bedding plants. Therefore, it behooves the florist to familiarize himself with the best adaptation of these invaluable plants, and gain even greater distinction than he possessed as the author of the pattern beds.

In closing, whether we are florists, nurserymen or landscape gardeners, let our work be the faithful representation of what may be done in helping nature, and though commercial interests must be a factor, there is no legitimate reason why it should be a barrier to good design. Let us have a brotherhood, at least, through the genius of which the world may be made more beautiful by the conferences and intermingling of thought on this the most delightful of vocations, "Landscape Gardening."

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Bedding Plants.

The next big business will be filling the flower beds, and with us veranda boxes and vases. Nearly all flower beds are of some geometrical design and with the material we use for filling them they can hardly be anything else. Shrubbery should never be planted in formal beds or straight lines, and fortunately they seldom are, and the trees dotted round the lawn take off the stiffness of the flower beds. Do not wait till the first of June, telling people it is not safe, but use discretion. You will have people asking you for pansies on the first of June when they should have had them to cheer up the garden all the month of May. I can only write with the knowledge of the weather of our latitude, and do not pretend to advise those in Chattanooga, Tenn., or Bismarck, Dakota.

Some thirty years ago, being young and green and not knowing our climate, I planted out quite an extensive flower garden from the 12th to the 15th of May. The coleus and achryanthes did not grow very fast but not a plant was hurt, and it is only one season in ten that we get any real frost after the first of May, but cool nights are an injury to real tropical plants and those there is no advantage in getting out before the last days of the month. Then again a lot of our bedding plants (and the leading ones) are not tropical, and if the thermometer goes down to 38 or 40 not the slightest harm is done. All the zonal geraniums, verbenas, petunias, sweet alyssum, carnation, centaurea, lemon verbena, lobelia and most all plants that you have been growing in a cool temperature, should go out at once, and I can tell you if you can get a few thousand of your zonal geraniums bedded out it is a great relief.

There are some plants that like cool weather, yet the slightest frost is death to them, notably the dahlias, cannas, caladiums, coleus, achyranthes, alternanthera, acalypha: Wait until June 1. Speaking of dahlias, some of the expert growers do not plant till the first of July. The idea is, I believe, that if planted early they get stunted in July, while if planted late the cooler weather comes on while they are making their vigorous growth and helps them to maintain a vigorous growth.

Planting.

I have often had occasion to speak about what I consider the correct method of planting, whether it be an elm tree or a geranium. It takes longer to plant properly and carefully, but if you wish the best results it is time well spent. Most of our patrons have their flower beds rounded up much too high to look well and far too high for the good of the plants. Now supposing an eight foot diameter bed has a rise of nine inches to the center. How long will it take before you could water that bed enough to soak down six inches? It would take hours. So you should water thoroughly when they are planted, and that can only be done by putting the plant in the hole, putting sufficient earth around the ball to firm it, and then giving it a good soaking. When the water has soaked away fill in the hole with dry earth, which acts as a mulch. This is worth a dozen waterings on the surface. Men you send out to plant beds are sometimes in a great hurry and just stick the plants in with the remark "That's good enough." Insist that it be done properly.

The hose is a great help to us in our dry seasons such as last year, but it is sadly abused and should only be in the hands of a gardener. While water ad libitum is all right for the cannas it is often the ruin of geranium and coleus beds. In the former it spoils the flowers of geraniums and induces a leafy, soft growth with little flower, and with coleus it makes a long, rank growth, just what you don't want.

Veranda Boxes and Vases.

You should be prepared at this time with a very large pile of very rich soil if you fill many veranda boxes and vases, for we use up a great deal of it. It is necessary that it should be very rich and if you don't have plenty of rotted manure you can use bone meal. In a veranda box of 10 or 12 inches wide we use about as many plants as would fill a border three feet wide. This crowding I am aware is wrong, but people must have immediate effect and this crowding means that before the summer is over the soil is one mass of roots, so make it rich. This is a great city for veranda boxes. People prefer them to cutting up the lawn in front of their houses, and it is admitted by all who visit our city to be a great embellishment to our residence streets.

There is one trouble about them; we started the price too low some years ago and it has been almost impossible to raise it. In figuring up the plants we find that they amount at retail to quite as much as we get for them in the boxes, and our labor and soil and moss thrown in. But against that we must consider that we are not selling them at retail; it is as good as wholesale and better, for we use what we choose and it helps to clean up lots of stuff for which there would be no sale. We get for boxes eight to ten inches in diameter 75c. per running foot. We ought to get $1.00. At the former price you can live and go to the annual convention. At the proper price you might gain a "moderate competency" with fifty years' strict attention to business. It's not nearly as good a business as being successful with American Beauty roses, but we can't all be that and some must be satisfied with the plebeian end of the business.

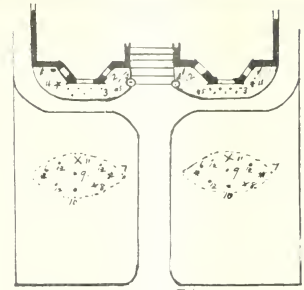
Outdoor Tulips.

We are often asked just now, "what shall we do with our tulips to have them flower next year?" Now the best answer is to tell them to throw them away and buy more next year. The fact is, while flowering or just after the bulbs are building up the growth that gives us the flower the following year, and if dug up and dried off as soon as the petals are dropped is treating them badly. If you expect to have flowers next year the bulbs should be left in the ground till the tops are about dried up and that with early tulips is at least the first week of June. If the bulbs are planted deep there is no better way than to leave them in the ground and plant your summer flowers without disturbing the roots. If you lift the bulbs dry them off well and store them away.

William Scott.

HARDY PLANTS.

The accompanying plan indicates a double bay window house, north front, standing at the street level, on a lot 40 feet wide, with only a narrow walk at each side of house.



Key to Plan.

1 Osmunda Claytoniana
2 Convallaria majalis
3 Hepatica acutiloba
4 Dentaria grandiflora
5 Aquilegia canadensis
6 Papaver orientale
7 Delphinium formosum
8 Mertensia virginica
9 Campanula Van Houttei
10 Hemerocallis rutilans
11 Echinops ritro
12 Aquilegia vulgaris
13 Iris pumila

All plants included in the design are herbaceous and all will reappear each spring. If desired, some bright colored late flowering annuals can be planted beside the early blooming perennials to help the show for the latter part of the summer; petunias, verbenas, annual phlox and candy tuft would serve the purpose, and a few plants of Salvia splendens brighten a garden wonderfully. These annuals will not hinder the reappearance of the perennials the following spring.

The two beds could be slightly raised or a low border of boulders might be placed around them and the interspaces set with any of the hardy ferns.

There is a certain degree of formality in this design which cannot be avoided. To attempt to make it irregular would be merely an affectation.

John Higgins.

Ed. Florists' Review: As you ask for criticisms of the planting plans, by Mr. Higgins, I would suggest many changes in the plan for a lot 50x100 in your issue of May 9.

In the narrow bed at back of the lot the ends are planted with purple barberries. I think purple trees and shrubs not being normal colors, should be used only for contrast effects. Planted as proposed the bed would be bare, the central perennials starting late, though contrast with garden asparagus in July would be good. I would prefer to make an irregular bed widening at the upper right hand corner and plant Cornus sibirica, golden willow (kept cut to a shrub), single kerria, purple barberry and Spirea aurea. Then I would relegate the aquilegia to this bed, it has no place in a conspicuous bed in front of house.

If paeonies are desired, space them well and plant Lilium superbum between, and in front plant Gaillardia grandiflora, thus giving continuous bloom to frost. I would leave out the purple barberry (2) opposite (6) for reasons before stated. And Forsythia suspensa has no place in so narrow a bed with walk at side. If Forsythia is desirable in such a narrow lot, which I doubt, use F. Sieboldii, a more compact grower. I have seen F. suspensa cut down this spring (30 years planted) that had spoiled the grass in a circle 40 feet in diameter.

I would rather use a finer foliaged shrub like rhodotypos for 17 and 18, planting Lonicera tartarica, alba and rubra in place of Japan quince. The dwarf trees are all right unless the weeping mulberry is tender. It is apt to kill back in exposed situations. A tree lilac—Syringa japonica—would be better.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

Cuttings should be rooted now right along as time and space can be found for the operation. The earlier rooted stock can, if necessary, be topped now, and such tops make very fine cuttings, because they are in a nice, healthy, vigorous condition.

Of course, it is a severe check to a plant to be topped in this manner, but if care and common sense are employed in the operation the plant will very soon recuperate. Such plants can be planted out, if desired, and several shoots taken up or they make very useful plants for growing on in pots and flowering in an 8 or 9-inch pot, leaving as many stems as the condition of the plant warrants, and your knowledge of what your market calls for as regards quality may suggest.

Cuttings rooted from now on are best kept to single stem. Many propagating houses at this season get pretty hot during the day, and a better place for rooting cuttings is a cold-frame placed in a sheltered position under a north wall, if possible. If in a position where the sun will strike it, the glass should be shaded during the day. The main point to be observed is to keep the foliage of the cuttings from wilting and to this end they should be frequently syringed and liberally watered. If allowed to wilt too much the cuttings will get dry and hard and will not root satisfactorily, naither will they make as good plants if they do root. Nights when the air is mild and still the sash can be taken off the frame and the cuttings will be greatly benefited by the cool, moist night air.

As cuttings are rooted, they can be potted up and left out in the frames until needed for planting; indeed, they are much better off out there than in the houses, providing they are within easy reach of the hose. Plants in small pots dry out very rapidly when the sun is hot, and a brisk drying wind is blowing. If stood rather closely together they will not dry out so rapidly, but don't forget that if you stand them too closely they will get drawn up, thin and long jointed, a condition to be avoided above all things.

Some of the new ones are making nice growth, my favorite of the newer lot being Nellie Pockett, which is one of the neatest habited varieties that has been sent out for some time. Owing to the loose conformation of the flower this variety will probably never rank very high as a purely commercial variety, but the man with a home trade will make no mistake in growing this very handsome variety.

Eaton is doing nicely and is, we understand, to be largely planted, so will in all probability be largely in evidence at the fall exhibitions. Mrs. Elmer D. Smith and Mrs. Barkley are also hidding fair to render a good account of themselves.

Iolantha is nothing to boast of, but it has lots of time ahead of it yet.

Specimen plants should be potted on from 6 to 8-inch pots as they are ready for it, using good fibrous loam with a little green sod over the drainage in the bottom of the pot. The plants should be kept closely pinched to encourage as many "breaks" as possible, and frequently syringed to keep the wood soft.

Dust your plants over frequently with tobacco dust, or spray with the liquid extract, to keep down the black and green fly. The green fly I regard as worse than the black because it disfigures the foliage much more if not kept down.

CARNATION NOTES.

By this time you have all your carnations in the field, and the hardest part of the work is done; but if you want to have good plants to house early you must look after them right along. Begin at once with the hand cultivator, or the hoe, and work the surface of the soil between the rows. As soon as we finish planting a considerable patch we go through with the cultivator to loosen up the soil, which gets packed more or less from walking over it in planting. After that we cultivate at least after each good rain, and if it does not rain for a week or so we go over it again anyway. Keeping the soil stirred is far better than watering. I have never been obliged to water carnations in the field because I have always been a firm believer in cultivating.

Some of the first ones we planted are throwing up shoots and pinching must be looked after closely from now on. Such varieties as Mrs. Bradt and White Cloud need close watching to keep them bushy. We will have about six weeks of good growing weather yet, and in those six weeks you want to produce the body of your plants so they can throw strong flowering shoots later on.

PAN-AMERICAN ROSE SHOW.

On account of May 20 being dedication day at the Exposition, the date for the opening of the exhibition of tender roses has been advanced one day and it will open on the 20th instead of the 21st, so as to give the immense number that will be in attendance on dedication day a chance to see the roses. The exhibits in place on the 20th will probably be viewed by the largest concourse of people that has ever enjoyed a display of roses in this country. The classes and rules and regulations were printed in our last issue.

All entries should be addressed to William Scott, Horticulture Building, Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, N. Y.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market is in very bad shape indeed. There is a fair amount of business being done for the middle of May, but there is an immense amount of stuff coming in; so much so that at least one commission man had not vases enough to put all his flowers in water when they arrived. Even sweet peas do not sell on sight, though they move pretty well. Last week we had a great deal of rainy weather, which has been rather hard on all stock, especially sweet peas. This week has begun more auspiciously in point of weather. It is hardly worth while to quote prices at present.

Bedding Plants.

The fateful 10th of May has passed and this week finds the bedding-out season in full swing. Heretofore the work has been chiefly on a small scale, but now the big beds that have been gorgeous with hyacinths, daffodils and tulips are nearly ready for their second planting. An exception to this is seen in some fine late beds in favored spots, and in the beds planted with the plum-colored tulip Gesneriana. This variety is exceedingly handsome and although a single, very durable, remaining in perfect condition for a long time when the weather is favorable.

Some very effective beds are seen planted with tulips and pansies; where separate colors are used this combination gives scope for great variety of rich effects.

Thaddeus N. Yates & Co., of Mt. Airy, have a large stock of bedding plants.

Various Items.

John Burton has a well grown lot of young Beauties in small pots. The sash bars are up on his new range of glass.

George Leiker, of Lansdowne, has five houses devoted to carnations with the exception of one bench each of sweet peas and callas in pots, which have paid well. His carnations include Jubilee, which he considers the best red, and which looks well; Ethel Crocker, Mrs. Bradt and a white seedling of his own, a free bloomer of fair size and stem, not intended for dissemination but for own use.

Casper and George L. Pennock have broken ground for two new houses. It is understood that they intend planting Beauties exclusively this season.

Joseph Bevis is cutting very fine Brides and Bridesmaids from two-year-old plants in solid beds.

David Anderson has one Beauty house planted and will plant the other this week.

It is rumored that both Charles S. Price and F. W. Whiteley will plant little or nothing besides American Beauties this season.

We have all noticed the steam ash lifter that works so well in transferring the ashes in an endless chain of little scoops from the cellars of the City Hall to the wagons on the street above. Such an arrangement would be a boon in many of our greenhouse plants. It was said that Mr. Montgomery had an economical method for the work in operation at the Waban Conservatories; certainly our methods here are crude and old-fashioned. Will not some of our bright inventive minds give us an adapted form of these endless scoops that our steam boilers can run, something simple and not too expensive?

The feature of the Germantown Horticultural Society meeting last Monday evening was the vanilla orchid beans exhibited by Michael Punch, gardener to Roberts Le Boutellier. Addresses were delivered by Edwin C. Sellett and George Redles. The June meeting of the society will be a notable one.

Trade Conditions.

A tremendous cut of roses and an even larger one of pinks is coming in, and there is also quite a supply of a mixed variety. Heavy sales are made, but at a very low figure, and every street corner has a busy fakir forcing goods upon the public at the lowest rates yet touched, even by them. And we must expect things to keep this way for a couple of weeks, I presume.

Green material of all kinds except adiantum has been scarce for a few weeks, and hardy ferns were really out of the market for a few days. But Henry M. Robinson & Co. have now received heavy shipments from the South and can now supply an unlimited quantity. They expect to handle three millions of them before the middle of June. These figures are big enough to interest Morgan or Carnegie.

Various Items.

J. J. McCormack has opened a plant auction at the corner of Franklin and Oliver streets. He puts out a brave little flier announcing a great variety of goods and advertising sales every Wednesday and Saturday at 10 a. m., to be continued as long as they are well attended.

A few years ago two brothers, George and Arthur Delay, were well known to the florist trade of Boston. George was on the ill-fated steamer "Portland" and his body was one of the few washed ashore. A few days ago Arthur died of consumption, with which he had been suffering for several months. Through the kindness and thoughtfulness of Henry M. Robinson, our leading dealer in hardy supplies, a fund of over $100 had lately been raised for him, which must have been of some assistance to him during his closing days.

Those stone statues upon old Horticultural Hall surely have been getting their full share of attention lately, not only from the newspapers but from the general public. A big crowd gathered one day to see them lowered by a big derrick. They were on their dignity, and insisted on coming down very slowly indeed. I never bothered myself to wonder whom the figures represented, but it seems that the goddesses of fruits, flowers and grains, Pomona, Flora and Ceres, respectively, were the lucky people. The "Globe" says they are to be removed to the new hall.

W. H. Elliott has been making quite a systematic search for real estate suitable for a combination summer home and an enlargement of his rose-growing business. A few days ago he purchased 180 acres of land and a large brick house at Madbury, N. H., which will make an ideal summer home when alterations now under way are finished. And, as Mr. Elliott considers himself an expert in the selection of soils, it is probably fully as safe to say it will make a valuable addition to his business whenever he gets ready to erect greenhouses. The property is particularly well situated to accommodate shipping interests toward Boston.

Two more florist stores have closed up on us—M. Thompson, Mason street, and Lawson & Taylor, on Boylston street. The last young lady to close up, some few weeks ago, chased up her creditors indefatigably until she found and paid each one, but her example has not been followed this time by the lady in the case. It is said that Lawson & Taylor are to reopen. J. S. Manter.

AN ASPARAGUS HOUSE.

The engraving is from a photograph of part of the new addition Mr. W. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass., has just made to his extensive asparagus houses.

The house is now 200 feet long and 110 feet wide, containing about 600,000 cubic feet. It is built on a side hill, and from the lowest point in the front to the highest point at the back, is 50 feet in height. This immense structure is supported by wrought iron pipe, the main supports being 1 1-2 and 1 1-4-inch pipe, branching into 3-4-inch at the purlins. The woodwork is cypress throughout, and the house is glazed with 16x24 glass. There are 13 beds in this house, each about 4 feet wide, with 2-foot walks running between. There are, also, 2-inch plank walks run overhead, the whole length of the house, every 7 feet from the ground up; these walks help to strengthen the structure, as well as being necessary to use in training the vines. The uppermost planks are used for growing chrysanthemums and Asparagus Sprengeri, the latter being grown in long, shallow boxes containing 2 1-2 inches of soil; these boxes are 2 feet apart, just allowing enough light to reach the asparagus underneath, while at the same time shading it and keeping the house cool and moist at the top, thus preventing the growth of red spider, which is one of the most destructive pests encountered in the growing of asparagus.

The vines are trained on linen thread, attached to wires made fast to an iron trellis about 2 feet above the ground, 8 inches apart, and at the top an equal distance, in order that the strings may be as nearly straight as possible.

This house is heated by steam, one 6-inch main supplying the radiating pipes, which are distributed overhead throughout the house; in all there are 23,000 feet of pipe used in trellises, supports and heating the house.

Pekin, Ill.—Geo. A. Kuhl is rebuilding inside of houses, putting in tile benches. Has planted a house of Liberties and one of Bridesmaids this week. Business is fine. He reports having put into propagating bed this season over 100,000 cuttings of roses.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The continued cool weather, together with the fact that quite a number of houses have been replanted, has resulted in somewhat reducing the supply, especially of roses, but demand is still weak. While some extra select tea roses are held at as high as $6 the top limit will be more generally recognized as $5, and the average range is from $2 to $5, with the heaviest emphasis on the lower figure. In fact, "punk" aggregations have been cleaned up at as low as $1. First class Beauties hold their own very well, but they are precious few in number, while there is a big lot of stuff that serves as a horrible example and brings what the buyer offers.

In carnations a few very extra selects are held at $3 and $4, but they are so few they are hardly worth mentioning. On good carnations $2 is practically the top price, while really good flowers can be had at $1.25 to $1.50, and the great bulk of under grades goes at 40 to 75 cents.

Lilac is now coming in freely, and is moving fairly well. Parrot tulips are also beginning to come in and sell very well at $4.00 per 100. The arbutus season is about over. Tulips are doing a trifle better, but $2 is about the top price. The supply of lilies has shortened materially, and good ones now go very well at $4 to $6, and we hear of some sales of extra at as high as $8 and $10.

Various Items.

The program for the regular meeting of the Florists' Club, to be held to-morrow (Friday) evening, includes a paper on growing the cyclamen by Paul Kopanka. Other essays are also expected.

Herman Schiller, the well known West Madison street florist, died at 10 o'clock last Sunday morning. He had been in poor health for a number of years, though still able to attend to business up to shortly before his death. He was 49 years of age and leaves a widow and six children, the latter aged from 20 to 12. He was laid to rest last Tuesday in the funeral plat at Niles Center, the services being held in the city in the morning, which were attended by numerous friends in the trade. Mr. Schiller was born in Germany, and came to America in 1879, when he established himself in the greenhouse business at Niles Center as a member of the firm of Schiller & Kuske. Later, when his inflammatory rheumatism became chronic, he established himself in the city and the greenhouses, which he eventually owned entire, were finally sold and are now conducted by Mr. John Brod. He was also successful as a storekeeper, and leaves an estate of considerable value. The business will probably be continued by his widow, under the management of the able corps of assistants, of which Mr. Geo. Asmus is one.

Bassett & Washburn have already replanted about half of their Beauty houses. They report carnations in the field, of which they have about five acres, as doing remarkably well. Mr. and Mrs. Bassett are now sojourning at Battle Creek, Mich.

There is a feeling among some of the growers that the time has come to take steps to prevent the ruinous competition in the market at times of glut. One suggestion is that the growers get together and agree upon a bottom limit at which flowers shall be sold, any left when the market has taken all it will at that price to be destroyed. The suggested bottom limit is $1.00 per 100 on roses and 80 cents per 100 on carnations. It is believed that this would not only bring the grower more money on the average, but would protect the retailer from the worst of the competition by the fakir.

Kennicott Bros. Co. made an arrangement with Klehm's Nurseries to bloom 5,000 longiflorum lily bulbs for Decoration Day, and expect the cut for that day will be about 10,000 flowers.

The preliminary list of premiums for the annual exhibition of the Horticultural Society of Chicago, to be held next November, has been issued. Copies may be had by addressing the secretary, Room 1002, 185 Dearborn street.

Alexander Rodgers, the seedsman, 220 Johnson street, has filed a declaration in bankruptcy. His liabilities are placed at $63,000 and his assets at $36,000. The Chicago Title and Trust Co. has been appointed receiver. A heavy decline in timothy seed last fall is said to have been the cause of the failure.

The board of education has decreed that flowers shall be barred from the graduating exercises at the public high schools, but some of the daily papers are criticising the action so vigorously that a reversal may be looked for.

The Geo. Witthold Co. arranged a very elaborate wedding decoration at the Germania Club last Monday, regarding which we shall have more to say next week. They also put in an elaborate decoration this week for one of the large department stores, wild smilax and palms being the main features.

It is reported that Mr. J. D. Thompson is to sever his connection with the Chicago Carnation Co. July 1 next.

SET FUNERAL DESIGNS.

EDITOR FLORISTS' REVIEW: Will you kindly permit me through the columns of the REVIEW to make a few remarks regarding "set pieces for funerals." I have noted, both in sorrow and in pain, from time to time, cuts and descriptions of funeral designs in your esteemed journal and I suffered in silence, contenting myself by grinding my teeth and swearing at delinquent customers, but there is a limit to human endurance, and when I saw in the pages of the REVIEW of April 26 a cut of an open book and a written description accompanying it, I looked for an ax, for some one needed it, sure.

Just to show how ridiculous some florists are I will explain: The book in question was 3 feet by 4 feet, making 1,728 square inches; they put into it 1,800 roses, or 150 dozen; 200 valley, besides 3-5 of a 24-inch wreath that contained 2,500 violets, hung on the corner, taking up considerable of the space. Now, first-class Brides and Perles will measure from 11-2 to 13-4 inches in diameter. Just imagine those 1,800 roses stuck into space less than an inch square, to say nothing of valley, violets, wreath and fern that were jabbed in one way or another. Just contemplate for a moment while I dig up the ghost of Michael Angelo and have him hunt for the artistic among those dove-tailed roses. In my mind, it brings up an old man's face with a mouthful of store teeth or a section of a huge ear of corn, and fully as artistic.

Now, Mr. Editor, a great many people have become disgusted with funeral designs of any description, and it's just through the forcing upon them of just such pieces as I mention above, and when florists will learn that it's not the amount of flowers that is put into a piece that gives it the value, but the artistic effect produced, more people will order designs for funerals. The average florist needs more brains and less stock in all his work. In all designs keep close to nature, avoid the mechanical part as much as possible; use as much of the stem of flowers as possible, and whatever you do, don't crowd. If a customer orders a wreath for $10, don't figure to put in five dozen roses at $2 per dozen, when you can get the desired effect with one-half the amount. Charge so much for stock and allow so much for brains, and if the customer kicks, rest assured it will be on account of the quality of the brains.

In conclusion, will say that if above advice is followed there will be less trouble in getting your customer to take designs for funerals. Here in San Francisco we make up more funeral designs than in any two cities in the east. Fifteen and twenty years ago we were just where the east is at present in the making of funeral pieces. While, out here, we all have Long's Floral Album to show customers the various designs, we would never think of making one like the original. On pillows, wreaths, etc., rose stems are from 6 to 10 inches in length, violets from 5 to 7 inches and all other flowers in proportion.

We have here some forty retail stores, all doing fairly well. Wholesale prices of flowers about the same as in the east, retail prices about 50 per cent less. Everybody buys flowers; the man with the tin dinner bucket buys a bunch of violets or sweet peas, according to the season, to take home to his wife or sick child, with as full appreciation as the banker who orders orchids or the finest roses for his mansion. They all have a love for the beautiful. SHIBELEY, The Florist.

San Francisco, Cal.

[After all the good advice that has appeared in the REVIEW regarding the avoidance of stiffness in the arrangement of flowers, it is rather painful to receive such a communication as above. In regard to the floral book illustrated it may be well to say that in response to inquiries we were informed that the people ordering were bound to have a book and nothing else. And the design itself did not look nearly as stiff and formal as it did in the photograph. And while the florist should endeavor to lead customers away from formal set designs, we are inclined to believe that if a customer with the cash in hand wanted a formal design made and wouldn't have anything else, we would make it up and get the money that would otherwise go to some florist who was not so particular. The REVIEW is a trade newspaper and reports things as they are. It deprecates the use of set designs, but it recognizes the fact that an immense number are made up and that they are a factor in the trade. Again, the florists who make up the loose, graceful work rarely have it photographed. It is generally the man who has built a railroad car or ship who has sufficient enterprise to have his work photographed. When we do get photographs of the others it is generally when we happen to have heard of it in advance, and get a photographer there on our own account. We trust that Mr. Shibeley will be good enough to help us out in this and favor us with some photographs of floral arrangements of the style he would recommend.—Ed.]

THAT DOLLAR.

How dear to our heart is the bright silver dollar,
When some kind subscriber presents it to view;
The liberty head without necktie or collar,
We long for the bush where the pretty thing grew.
The wide-spreading eagle, the arrows below it,
The stars and the words with the glory they tell,
The coin of our fathers, we're glad that we've got it,
For some time or other, 'twill come in right well;
The spread-eagle dollar, the star-spangled dollar,
The old silver dollar we all love so well.

The Market.

With almost two weeks of bright and really hot weather, the thermometer at 105 degrees in the greenhouses, its no great wonder that there is a surplus of stock on the market. Especially is this so of carnations, which are being cut in enormous quantities. The prices obtained for them are correspondingly small, there being scarcely any demand. From 50c to $1.50 per 100 is asked. Roses are rapidly growing smaller, showing all the effects of summer conditions. They are in better demand than carnations, but $4 per 100 is about the best price obtained. Miscellaneous stock that can be used for funeral work sells fairly well. Harrisii are a drug on the market.

Various Items.

I am glad to report that the damage done to the florists who were flooded by the recent high stages of the Ohio river is very small. Ben Glins, in whose greenhouses the water rose almost to the top of the benches, suffered most; but he reports loss very small. Fred Walz was kept back with his carnation planting, as the field used for that purpose was flooded. K. Wolf managed to stay the rising water for a time by building a dam around his place; but this gave way and there was two feet of water in his houses. No damage.

Saturday evening the regular monthly meeting of the Cincinnati Florists' Society was held. The nominations for directors of the society were in order and the following gentlemen were named: C. J. Jones, J. Schuman, Gus Adrian, H. Schwartz, Ben. George, F. Ball, A. Sunderbruch, F. W. Braunstein, E. G. Gillett, Max Rudolph, W. K. Partridge. These gentlemen will be voted for at the next regular meeting, which is the annual one and takes place June 8. Five directors are to be elected.

There was considerable discussion as to whether the Florists' Society would put a float in the trades' parade, which will be held during the fall festival. It was finally decided that the society could not back the float, but it would give all the help possible in connection with the florists at large.

The annual picnic was disposed of upon the same lines. C. J. Jones now has the matter in charge, and he promises great things. Good luck to him.

Dick Witterstaetter is receiving the congratulations of the trade upon his recent victory with "Enquirer" at the carnation exhibition of the Pan-American Exposition.

Mrs. Thomson bought out Mrs. M. Schwab and will continue the floral business on Vine street.

Dock Sunderbruch has sold out his interest in the business of A. Sunderbruch's Sons, and will take an interest in the Cincinnati Cut Flower Company.

Mr. Smith, of Smith & Fetters, Cleveland, was in the city. C. J. O.

Des Moines, Ia.—The new greenhouse plant of the Iowa Seed Company on Grand avenue consists of fifteen large houses. They are devoted wholly to the growing of plants.

Reports from the South indicate that the supply of Cape Jasmine buds will this year be much smaller than usual.

BANANAS.

Bananas planted now at the north grow 8 or 10 feet high by winter, when they can be dug, placed in cellar until spring. Then reset and they begin at once to grow, and produce an indescribably beautiful bloom, which lasts 4 to 6 weeks, and is sometimes followed by regular bunch of bananas. They are the most tropical in appearance and yet the most easily and quickly grown of all plants. To reduce surplus for next 30 days will mail good bulbs for 15c; doz. for $1.00.

WICHITA, KANS.

The Easter rush marked the beginning of the spring trade in Wichita. While reports of cool weather, etc., came from more northerly places, the Wichita florists were hustling to make up for lost time caused by a late spring.

Business so far is satisfactory in volume, and will slightly exceed previous years. This is caused, not so much by larger orders but more of them, which indicates a favorable condition. About the only item that shows a decrease is the sale of sweet pea seed, which is much less than last year.

Mr. Ferdinand Keuchenmeister, the "Riverside Florist," was recently appointed superintendent of the city parks. For the last two years he has been more or less connected with the work, and well knows just where to take hold. Mr. Keuchenmeister moved from his Harry street location last year to a new location near the parks, and rebuilt a much larger and more substantial establishment.

Mr. H. L. Hunt, for a while with W. H. Culp & Co., sold his interests last June to W. H. Culp and started new on his own land near College Hill, associating with him Mr. A. R. Marsh. They have three houses in good location in a growing part of the city, on the car line to the cemeteries, with a good chance to dispose of their surplus to downtown florists.

The "Wichita Greenhouse Co." are closing out their business, the manager, Mr. Capps, being obliged to keep away from the greenhouses on account of rheumatism, and Mr. Conklin, the president, having other business interests which take all his time.

C. A. Rose, the veteran florist, reports good business, with nothing specially exciting.

Chas. P. Mueller and W. H. Culp & Co., who both do a good deal of their own growing, are in their usual rush, in the effort to do their own planting in seasonable time, and at the same time not neglect the demands of their customers in the same line.

The prospects for Decoration Day trade are good, with promise of plenty of outdoor material to relieve the demand for greenhouse stock. X.

ST. LOUIS.

Club Meeting.

They May meeting of the Florists' Club on last Thursday was not so well attended as was expected. Only eleven members were in attendance, and of the eleven, six were from out of town. This shows how little interest the city members take in the club's welfare.

The meeting was opened promptly at 3 o'clock by President Guy. The exhibition committee made a report stating that more time was needed to complete the show list. Mr. Frank M. Ellis was selected the sixth member of the committee.

The trustees were instructed to make arrangements for the annual picnic to be held in July.

J. J. Beneke was appointed by the president on transportation to Buffalo for the S. A. F. convention.

Dr. A. S. Halstedt tendered the use of the Commercial Club rooms at Belleville to hold the next meeting of the club on June 13. The invitation was accepted; the members are to be at the club rooms promptly at 3 o'clock.

Three members were dropped from the rolls for non-payment of dues.

R. J. Mohr read an essay which was very interesting to the members.

Mr. H. G. Ude, of Kirkwood, showed a few seedling carnations of the Daybreak type with 52-inch stems. The committee voted them worthy of mention.

In a discussion on pink carnations Crocker, Joost and Lord were voted the best in the market just now.

The meeting then closed to meet at Belleville, June 13, when it is hoped that the city members will come out in full force.

The Market.

The cut flower trade is exceedingly dull at present and there are plenty of flowers of all kinds in the market and with no indication of immediate improvement. The warm weather of late has had a very bad effect on stock in general and roses in particular. There has been quite a lot of funeral work of late, but the transient trade is falling off very fast. Sunday and Monday it became quite cool, which helped things somewhat. Some of the roses that came in were mildewed. Beauties are selling cheaper than ever before. There are so many carnations coming in that the market can hardly be quoted. Fancy carnations bring $1 per 100; good carnations 50 cents, and one would hardly believe the price by the 1,000. Some of the downtown stores are selling them at 15 cents or two dozen for 25 cents and the fakirs even cheaper.

Sweet peas are still a glut at 25 cents per 100, except white, which bring 40 cents. Out-door flowers will soon be a thing of the past and when Decoration Day comes cheaper flowers will be scarce. Good valley still brings $3; poor valley $1 per 100. Harrisii and callas at about your own price. Smilax sells well just now.

The exhibition committee is now composed of C. C. Sanders, F. J. Meinhardt, Emil Schray, George Windler, F. M. Ellis and R. J. Mohr. They will meet at Ellis' store, May 28, to select their chairman and finish up the show premiums and the club's preliminary list. The Shaw list must be ready soon in order that it may be placed before the directors' meeting of the Missouri Botanical Garden for approval. They meet every second Wednesday of each month at their downtown office in the Bank of Commerce building.

Park Commissioner Ridgely has appointed Timothy O'Brien keeper of St. Louis place.

Mr. A. Jablonsky has opened a floral store on Easton avenue, near Hamilton.

Bowling.

The attendance at the bowling club is falling off each week and if this keeps up we will hardly have a team to roll at Buffalo. We could put a team together that would make any of them hustle to win, but they don't come down for practice. Chicago seems to have awakened again and is rolling from fifteen to twenty men each week, but we seem to have lost all interest, and the few who do come down are becoming disgusted at the small attendance. Last night only four came, and from the looks of the scores Ed Winterson's war whoops at Chicago last week were still ringing in their ears. Just look at them!

BUFFALO.

I am inclined to think that business has been very fair of late, with a plentiful supply of flowers. Mr. Kasting remarked a few nights ago, pointing to a vase or two of carnations, "That's the first time this spring that I have had any carnations left over night." The past few days have been very cool and quite as well for the florist and plant grower that it is, for a warm spell gives folks the fever and they want to plant their gardens two weeks before the safe time.

The club had a good meeting last week and every committee reported progress, which were all received as quite satisfactory. Mr. Charles H. Keitsch has taken hold of the trade exhibit in a masterly way, as only a thorough and painstaking mind can. He has every detail looked after, and as he won't say it for himself I must, viz., that there never was a more convenient and spacious hall for the purpose and never were the arrangements more carefully and thoroughly organized. Exhibitors will find this to their great satisfaction when convention comes. W. A. Adams is also doing good work as chairman of the Hotel Committee and if our florist friends find themselves without a resting place next August it will be only because they have not sent their explicit requests to Mr. Adams. The Sporting Committee, or rather Committee on Sports, are attending to their duties, and Captain Braik, the chairman, and W. Belsey Scott sneak off occasionally and have a little practice with the gun.

Visitors have been numerous. They include D. J. Thomas, editor of "Home and Flowers," Springfield, Ohio; James H. Vick, of Rochester; Mr. Crossman, the well known seedsman of Rochester; Mr. Dye and J. E. Stillaway of New Jersey; Walter Mott; Mr. J. A. Valentine of Denver, who is taking a trip from Galveston by ocean mail to New York. That's rather a roundabout way to reach the Pan-American from Denver, but it was good for his health, and he looks as rugged and calm as ever. Mr. Frank R. Pierson, of Tarrytown, has been here two days, and it took him all that time to receive the congratulations of his friends and the officials of the exposition on the magnificent display of tulips, which has been the bright, particular star of the Pan-American grounds. PITTSBURG.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club was held last Thursday evening at the rooms of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Company, 504 Liberty street. There was a large attendance, and in addition to commercial florists, private gardeners, interested amateurs and park men, all members were out in force and took part in the discussions. Seven new names were proposed for membership.

The subject under discussion was palms. It was handled by John Bader, of Troy Hill, Allegheny, and he brought in a lot of the different kinds of palms to illustrate what he was talking about. John is the largest grower of these plants in western Pennsylvania; he grows great quantities of young stock to wholesale to other florists, and large plants for those who do a decorating business. The different species of a genus were handled in turn, first the kentias, then the latanias, then the areceas, and so on; the plants of each set to be spoken about were placed on the table before the audience and their merits and demerits thoroughly and practically exposed by all of the members. Then this lot of plants was set aside and the next genus set up for similar treatment. The meeting was lively and merciless.

All points considered, the most favored palms were Areca lutescens, Kentia Belmoreana and Phœnix Rupicola; the only fault of the last named was its slowness of growth and consequent expensiveness. Dousing with cold water was given as the main cause of spotting and yellowing in several palms. Livistona rotundifolia had many friends, and so had Rhapis flabelliformis and R. humilis for long-time housework and shady quarters.

Mr. Randolph declared he could sell but a very limited number of Araucaria excelsa, because of its stiff appearance, but others found a demand for it among German and English people. All agreed, however, that as an all-around useful plant Pandanus Veitchii has never been surpassed "and we never will have an overstock of it, either, for you cannot raise it by the thousand from seed as you can palms."

The next meeting will be held June 13 and the subject is "Outdoor Hardy Roses." An exhibition of these flowers will also be made and the general public invited to come to see it free of all charge. P. A.

SPRINGFIELD, O.—Fire destroyed the greenhouses and barn of A. G. Wenger, near Villa, May 6th. Loss is estimated at $2,500, partly covered by insurance.

E. OAKLAND, CAL.—Mrs. R. D. Yelland will this season build a carnation house 18x50. It will be built over the carnation beds in August or September.

RUTLAND, VT.—S. A. Baker has added a new house, which will be devoted to plants, the old one being devoted wholly to cut flowers.

LANSDALE, PA.—William Sturzbecher has purchased the greenhouses of Theo. Kneuhl, of North Wales.

News Items.

The State Florists' Association met on the evening of the 8th at the Commercial Club rooms with Vice-President Alley in the chair. Heretofore we have been meeting at just any place selected by the secretary, but after some discussion it was decided to meet regularly in these rooms. They are centrally located, and the light and ventilation are good, and no more pleasant meeting place could be found anywhere.

The main topic for discussion was "The Street Fakir," who has swooped down on our city in full force during the past month or so. Up to this time our city has been free from these parasites, but as one grower said, they are in all large cities, and I guess our beautiful city of 200,000 is getting to be a big town, too. How willing we would be to remain a little smaller if it would only keep away the fakirs and a few other evils which are found only in large cities.

The warm weather which prevailed during the last part of April drove out thousands of carnations, which made it easy for the fakirs to find all the stock they wanted, and the store men are lond in denouncing the growers who have been selling to them. One grower especially has been and is still selling them all he can spare, and the store men say he will have to do the same next winter unless he ships his blooms out of town. Nearly every one present took part in the discussion, and it lasted over an hour, but no definite understanding was reached except that everybody should work together to force the fakirs out of business in this city. John Hartje especially became very eloquent at times while discussing the situation. Better slate John for a speech next February.

Mr. Hughey, of the Capitol Lumber Co., had on exhibition a plank of peck cypress which he says is used in the south in building government wharves and piers, and which he says never rots. It is the same as is used in greenhouse construction, except that it is full of small holes, made apparently by some insect, but Mr. Hughey says it does not impair its lasting qualities a bit. Several thousand feet were engaged at once for trial, and if it lasts it will become popular, as the price is quite low.

There was a nice exhibit of carnations in connection. Bertermann Bros. showed a vase of Mrs. Lawson which looked nice. E. A. Nelson showed a nice bunch of his seedling. John Hartje showed a bunch of large pink seedling and several blooms of other varieties. Baur & Smith showed a vase of first year seedlings, among which were some fine things. Two blooms of a cross between F. Hill and White Cloud looked as though they would be heard from again.

New members elected were E. Hyatt, of Anderson, and Wm. Bradley, of Elwood.

Out-of-town visitors were J. A. E. Haugh, Anderson, and W. W. Coles, Kokomo.

The bedding season is in full swing, and everybody is busy. The demand is fine and prices are good. A. B.

BALTIMORE.

Seasonable weather, rather below the average in temperature, with moderate rains, which already nearly aggregate the rainfall of the entire season of last year, make the record of a week well adapted to the spring work which goes on now with vim all around. The out-door shrubbery has had no untoward interruptions and the blooms of sorts in season has been abundant and unusually perfect. So, too, the beds of bulbs have been exceptionally showy whenever noticed.

Trade for the week ending today (May 13) has, as a rule, been as dull as was ever known at this time of the year. The quantity of flowers coming into the market is simply enormous, whilst the quality, thanks to favoring weather and the lack of the extreme heat liable to be experienced after the first week in May in this latitude, keeps up fairly. Good Beauties are still to be had in considerable quantities and carnations are also in fair condition, though some varieties are diminishing in size.

Prices diminish with the size of the flowers, as is expected. Out-door stuff, lilacs, etc., restrict the call for products of the greenhouses. Bedding stuff is in demand and apparently in ample supply. The Southern Narcissus nuisance is about over, the decline in price making further shipments unprofitable. John Cook has been shipping his Emperor to New York by the thousands and getting good returns. R.

DENVER, COLO.

The Denver Florist Club held their regular business meeting May 10 and had a very enjoyable time. Besides the routine business there was much discussion on various subjects that was of much interest to the members present. Five new names were added to our membership roll and we now have about fifty. The club meets the second and fourth Fridays of each month; that of the second is for business and discussion and the fourth is devoted to social features, which seems to strike the large majority and has tended to increase our membership.

The cut flower business has fallen off. Roses and carnations are bringing any old price. Several members of the club intend to go to Buffalo to take in the exposition. THORNE.

OLEAN, N. Y.—W. G. Ross is building three new greenhouses, covering a space 80x200 feet.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.—Messrs Meyer & Behring, two young men from Muscatine, have purchased a piece of land 130x200 upon which they will erect three greenhouses, each 100 feet long.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.—The annual floral parade took place May 7 and was a great event. The queen of the carnival rode in a carriage decorated with 1800 white pampas plumes and 4,000 pink carnations.

Nephrolepis Wittboldii

AT the left is a plant of N. Wittboldii lifted from the bench. After being photographed 40 runners were taken from this plant and potted up. It is even more prolific than the well-known Boston fern. It has not only greatly added beauty and grace but possesses every characteristic necessary to make it a money maker for the small as well as large grower. It produces with remarkable freedom, grows quickly into a fine specimen and as a house plant is fully as tough and lasting as N. Bostoniensis.

YOU NEED IT IN YOUR BUSINESS.

REMEMBER we are not sending out weak, puny plants, but Strong Vigorous Stock that will immediately produce runners if planted out in bench.

We are offering fine plants, ready for 3 and 4-inch pots at $1.00 each, $10.00 per doz., $75.00 per 100. The demand will be immense next year and you ought to have a stock ready.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Trade has not been so good for the past week owing to the dry spell we had. But a good rain has set in and everything is looking fine. Lots of Harrisii lilies coming in and sell at $5 per 100. Carnations around here are all planted out and the rain has given them a good start.

Jacob Schulz is cutting some very fine seedling carnations. He lately had a very large wedding decoration.

Wm. Mann reports his trade very good; lots of funeral work.

Jos. Coenen & Co. have all they can attend to in the plant line.

Ed. Heitz has completed his new range of houses at his new place.

The Kentucky Society of Florists is thinking of going to the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, in a body, during the convention of the S. A. F., in August.

Mr. John Bauer, the well-known pottery man, dropped dead in his office on Wednesday morning at 7:30 o'clock of heart disease. The stricken family has the sympathy of all the florists.

Hy Lichtefeld.

UTICA, N. Y.

There was a good attendance and much enthusiasm shown at the first regular meeting of the Florists' Club held since its recent reorganization. Several were proposed for membership and it is evident at this early date that the club will enjoy a prosperous and successful existence.

The subject mainly considered was the one of holding a flower show, and while all arrangements were deferred until some future meeting it was unanimously decided that one should be held during the coming fall.

The president's table was decorated with several vases of carnations, among them some fine blooms of No. 11, C. F. Baker & Sons' seedling from Armazindy and Albertini, and a magnificent bunch of Queen Louise, J. L. Dillon's regal white, for which a vote of thanks was tendered the donor.

The next regular meeting will be held Thursday evening, June 6th. S.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

We have received from Secretary Herr a copy of the printed proceedings of the tenth annual meeting of the above society, held at Baltimore last February. It is very neatly printed and contains all the essays read at the meeting, together with stenographic reports of the discussions on same, and a lot of other interesting matter. It is a valuable reference book for carnation growers and should be in the hands of every one interested in this important flower. A copy may be had by anyone by joining the society. The annual membership fee is $2.00, and applications should be addressed to Albert M. Herr, Sec'y, Lancaster, Pa.

REDLANDS, CAL.—Upon the arrival of President McKinley and party the train was pelted with roses. The city was beautifully decorated. The broad street was literally carpeted with roses, purple lupins and red poppies, and the wealth of flowers everywhere filled the air with fragrance. Oranges were profusely used in the decorations, and the marshals of the parade wore orange ribbons across their shoulders. The exercises took place on the flower-bedecked baleony of the hotel.

PETOSKEY, MICH.—The Petoskey Floral Co. will hereafter be known as the Petoskey Floral and Nursery Co., having added a full line of ornamental trees and shrubs.

EDITOR: "Here's a line in your poem about the 'flowerets shooting into the air.' Flowers do not shoot. They grow." Poet: "But, sir, they have pistils."—Melbourne Leader.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Chas. Tritschler, gardener for the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R'y, has begun planting out at the stations on his road.

Awarded the only first-class certificate of merit by the Society of American Florists, at Boston, Mass., Aug. 21, 1890, for Standard Flower Pots.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Decoration Day.

Decoration day must now be considered in many ways. 'Tis not altogether the day of sad memories which occasioned its naming. The extraordinary march of time with its ever increasing army of new people must needs change conditions. Originally a day set aside for the decorating of the graves of those who fell in defense of the republic, it has become a great and grand institution, a national day upon which the smiles of prosperity quickly dry up the tears of adversity. The young girl, in her gandy dress on pleasure bent, may be seen going half way to the cemetery with her widowed mother, and the picture typifies the present and the country, and in this light must the florist consider it. The past made the present possible, but the present is too much innoculated with its get thereisms to stop to acknowledge the debt.

Upon the florists of this country devolves the duty of preserving the original intent of Memorial Day, and in our humble opinion some organized effort should be made with that end in view. The decorating of the principal monument in each city on that day by the florists would result in a vast amount of good to the trade, for it would remind others of their duty. Here in New York the day is a general holiday, almost every line of business is shut tight. There is quite a business done in flowers to be worn on the street, and the Greeks' stands are the most patronized; the stores do very little business, especially in the afternoon, and should be closed. Almost everyone who can plans to go out of the city and many boxes of flowers are taken to friends.

The principal part of the trade, however, is in small bedding plants, and the growers attending the plant market derive nearly all the benefit of this section. Of late years some of the Sunday-schools have in an organized way bought a number of plants to decorate prominent graves. Usually the Sunday before Decoration Day the general public go out to the cemeteries to decorate family graves, consequently it may be said the greatest plant trade is done a week or more before the 30th. Almost every kind of plant and design is used. Some terrible things are seen on graves sometimes, and we often wonder if the florists' tongue or the ideas of the customer are responsible; we fear it is both in the majority of cases. This much can be said, however, to the credit of the people who have lived a few years in this country, that they prefer natural to artificial flowers for decorating purposes. Of course almost anything you have growing can be used, and it is perhaps only business to try and sell everything, but we should not forget that there are many things inappropriate.

Let's talk things over. Don't you think that you could induce some school or society to invest a small sum in connection with the greatest event in the history of their country? True, you may not make a dollar on the transaction, but you are sure to get some good from it indirectly. Better for you to do this than to loan out plants, or give flowers for nothing to some wealthy hen party. In the case of a class, society, or school buying plants from you, you might arrange to have them planted for them; in many cases we notice plants in pots put around some monuments, only to be dried up and swept away in a day or two. Where there is no room to put plants out, better induce the party to adopt the wreath.

Again, as to the Grand Army Posts, we scarcely can hold them responsible for what we see them carrying whilst on parade on Memorial Day. We are inclined to think that each post should at least carry a well-made wreath, and that every man in the post could be induced to pay 25 or 50 cents for an individual wreath, providing it was made prettily, and in quantity, small, pretty wreaths could be made for that price. Again, let us say that for Christmas and Easter we make herculean efforts to capture trade; would it not pay to make up a set of Memorial Day wreaths? Not artificial stock, but well-made designs in natural material. We are of the opinion that if such were on exhibition in your window, and on your counter from now on, many could be sold. Some special effort should be made to have our trade more closely identified with the day. It is now to all intent and purposes a florists' day, but it is yearly becoming more imaginary and less a fact, and it is the profession's own fault.

We regret to say we cannot say much in praise of the manner in which New York monuments have been decorated for the past seven or eight years, and every year it grows worse. Ten or fifteen years ago there used to be considerable rivalry among the best florists as to who could do the best work on the principal monuments, but of recent years the work has been left to amateurs or worse; the consequences are that with a few exceptions the life effort of many a famous sculptor is made for the time a thing of ridicule.

The Sons of the American Revolution and the Irish Society of New York are the only two societies who show dignity and reverence in their decorations for this occasion. The former uses a 30-inch round wreath of green galax on the in and outside of the wreath, and bronze galax in the center; on the bronze leaves in yellow lettering are the words "Sons of the Revolution;" and broad ribbons of the Continental colors—buff and blue—are tied at the top of the wreath. They are always well made and are very effective. One is placed on the Nathan Hale, Washington and Montgomery monuments here. The latter society has adopted the crescent wreath of bay leaves, tied at the top with Irish and American silk flags; these are put on the graves of those who were prominent in the rebellion of 1798.

The Swedish and Norwegian singing societies of Greater New York yearly march to the Battery, at old Castle Garden, and each club puts a wreath of flowers on Ericsson's statue. Their colors, of course, form a great part in the decoration, but they put wreaths around his neck, pile his hands full, and tie more on his legs until it seems that the poor statue smiles and scowls at its plight. Of late the colored people alone take care of Lincoln's monument, with characteristic results. Regimental monuments are disfigured by cheap paper muslin flags and flaring immortelle designs. Lafayette Post makes some attempt at symbolical decoration, but the head of Lafayette is made a substitute for a tent pole from which to suspend ropes of greens. We might go on indefinitely to describe these decorations. Lincoln has often a wreath of immortelles or green put round his neck; Washington is often made to hold a wreath, as if about to present it; Farragut is holding an anchor, as if he were going to throw it overboard; Grant carries wreaths on his shoulders, or one around his hat; and why all this? Is it not time that the florist should know what is proper; what constitute, if not the rules, at least the etiquette of art? To find shelter behind the ever-ready excuse that the people do not appreciate art, but are forever demanding caricatures of it, is cowardly.

The Big Bell of Apple Blossoms and the Monogram.

Let us point out a few things. Six sprays of leucothoe, green or bronze preferable, tied both sides of a ten-inch wire ring, a small silk flag tied in the center at the bottom, makes a pretty little wreath that will appeal to any Grand Army man, and it can be made and sold at a profit for a few cents. The same kind of design can be made of boxwood, mountain laurel, bay leaves, galax, cycas, ivy or any substantial green with only a few cents difference in the cost. The manner of making up the wreaths should be such as to add value to the material; they should be the same on both sides, made good and substantial and tidy, and have the national flag attached. We are under the impression that if florists would take a sample of these to the proper authorities, almost every man parading in commemoration of the day would carry one of these wreaths to a comrade's grave.

Where a collective wreath is desired it can be made of lasting flowers such as roses, carnations, hydrangea, in fact anything that will last several hours parading, but there should be flowers, not tinfoil, on the reverse side, and the wreath should be any size from two to five feet in diameter. The only correct wreath of green to put on a soldier's grave is a crescent wreath made full and round, with bay leaves; of course there are several others, which as things go are good. A wreath of small cycas leaves, the lightest of all wreaths (and weight is a very important matter where things have to be carried long distances) can be made on a frame work of fine wire netting. This is done by taking a crescent wreath frame and fixing the netting in the shape the wreath is when mossed, individual leaves of Lanrus nobilis or leucothoe are then fastened on by wire hooks, twisted on the inside; the reverse side of the wreath can be greened with ferns, or Asparagus Sprengeri, or smilax; there is no moss or sticks used. This style of wreath could also be used for general carrying purposes.

Party emblems or designs, the most of which are at best monstrosities, are entirely out of place on Decoration Day. Often we see anchors, fire trumpets, swords, flags, post or state designs made of several colors in immortelles or cape flowers; these are carried admiringly in processions; but that does not make them appropriate nor justify their manufacture. The florist is mostly to blame for it. Harmonious effects of course are always delightful, but the use of colors in almost any form are permissible for this event, in fact the more cheerful the colors the better. You are not providing for a funeral, you are beautifying memories, consequently bontonnieres of red, white and blue (corn flowers, red rose, white carnation, or any such), loose bunches of flowers or small wreaths of flowers are distinctly good; even the wearing of an ivy leaf shows some thought of the full meaning of the day, and when you consider the vast amount of material such as rhododendron, Azalea Mollis and all manner of outdoor flowers growing in the gardens or nurseries of the land, to no purpose beyond the commercial value of the plant, there are immense opportunities lost in not creating pleasure and thoughtfulness in the minds of school children, grown up people and the veterans, that there is something beyond cemeteries to be proud of on that day.

Whilst on the matter of national colors we would say red, white and blue ribbon is not expressive enough, there are too many tricolors and combinations of colors to typify other countries; flags are the only things to use, the only things that cannot be misunderstood.

IVERA.

A WEDDING DECORATION.

We present herewith several engravings from photographs of a wedding decoration arranged by the Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago, at the Germania Club, that city, recently.

The huge bell suspended from the ceiling in the dining room was eight feet in diameter and was of apple blossoms, the blooming twigs being inserted so thickly as to make it a solid mass of bloom.

The balcony was banked with decorative plants and in the central foreground was a huge vase of American Beauties, hardly discernible in the picture. As all the photographs had to be taken by flashlight, detail is not as perfect as could be wished.

One picture shows the decorations where the ceremony was performed, and here the leading flowers were lilies and white carnations, while Nephrolepis Wittboldii and asparagus were freely used as greens. Just in front and not seen in the picture was a hollow floral ball filled with loose flowers. Small white ribbons led from this to a nearby doorway and at the conclusion of the ceremony a pull at the ribbon opened the ball and the contents fell on the couple.

As will be seen in the pictures, wild smilax was freely used overhead and decorative plants occupied all available points of vantage. But the best effects in decorative plants were on the stairs and in the alcoves and turns of the hallway above, which it was unfortunately impossible to photograph for lack of light and inability to use a strong enough flash to give any detail.

The general view will give some idea of the decorations on the tables. This view was taken from the balcony. The price of the decorations was $400.

A RETAILER'S VIEWS.

"How The Grower Should Do."

BY E. A. SCHERER.

[Read before the Detroit Florists' Club.]

Andrew Carnegie has said that the three things necessary to build up a commercial success are: First, capital; then, management; then, labor. Of course, he did not refer to the florist's business; if he had, no doubt he would have mentioned labor about a dozen times to capital and superintendence once. Of course, we know there is a great amount of work in all branches of the business, but we presume it will be admitted that the work, worry and the thousand and one annoyances that must be borne by the retailer outweigh the troubles of the grower at least a thousand to one.

The retailer is the prime mover in keeping flower lovers in buying humor, making new enstomers by every known means, forever catering to the whims and fancies of customers, so that no opportunity is lost to keep the growers' stock moving from the greenhouse to the user. A slave to the grower, a slave to the flower buyer, a loser from stale stock that was perhaps half asleep when the grower unloaded it, a loser from bad debts, a loser in many ways that eat mighty heavily into that mere pittance denominated profit, it seems to us he should be accorded at least fair treatment by the grower.

Where the Ceremony Took Place.

One of the freaks of the growers, which amounts almost to vandalism, is the custom of holding up stock on the approach of a holiday. The result is you unload a lot of unsalable stock at an extortionate price that your retailer often sells at a fearful loss in two ways—first, his legitimate profit has been sacrificed; second, his customers have been so grieved by seeming extortionate prices that they vow never to buy another flower, and many of them stick to it, so the aftermath is simply a falling off in trade away below normal, with the fault settled on the retailer when it should rest on the grower. We simply state the case with the hope that a full discussion will somewhat mellow this crowning injustice to the poor retailer.

Another thing we think the fair-minded grower ought to do: When prices change either way we think it only common courtesy to notify your regular buyers of the fact; in these days of telephones it is very little trouble and ought to be a common practice. We also think the grower should be careful in grading his stock if he expects the sky-high price. He should be sure the stock is right in quality and right in count; it is not very satisfactory to the retailer to unpack a lot and find either short count or a sprinkling of off stock which must be sold at a loss if at all. Another thing: When a grower has taken an order for stock we think he should be sure to fill it on time, and if there is any chance of not being able to do so, notify the customer at once so he may square himself with his customer.

Another funny notion of the grower is to catch up a trade paper and notice the quotations on graded stock in which he may find a higher price quoted for fancy goods than he got for the last lot sold. He is quite likely to jump his price to the highest point, although he never visits any other concern to find out whether his stock is high grade or not.

There are seasons when the grower has more stock than the retailer can handle under present methods, as the retailer cannot see his way clear to make the price low enough to absorb this surplus on account of the cost of selling and handling. We think the retailer would do well to make a price, say "40 carnations, 40 cents." If this would not get the surplus to the consumer through proper channels let the balance go to the dump pile and hang the grower that unloaded his stock at the corner grocery. Of course, I wouldn't be too hard on him for the first offense, for I must say the growers are a pretty good lot of fellows after all.

One point we hope will be aired in our discussions to follow is the advisability of growing more hardy or herbaceous flowers and flowering plants for the summer and fall trade. We think there is a field of great promise along these lines.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Decoration Day.

Decoration or Memorial Day is one of the big floral days of the year. Not anything like Easter or Christmas, yet a day of very hard work. In some communities many more and elaborate decorations are made than others. It is rather a time of cheap flowers. To the plant-man who fills vases for cemeteries it is a season of the hardest work and there is a sigh of relief when Decoration Day is over.

For a good many years when a customer said, "I would like my vase filled for Decoration Day," we were foolish enough to say, "You had better wait a few days; we often get a cold spell round about the 30th." Now that used to throw any amount of work on us for the first week of June. We were just overwhelmed, for directly June the 1st came you were asked rather snappishly, "Why is not my vase filled?" Fill all your orders at the earliest opportunity you can. Don't delay a day. Get them out.

Vases and Boxes.

Few of you may be situated just as the writer is. At one time we used to send two or three wagons out; two loaded with plants and one with the soil. We thought, of course, that we were doing the very best thing, but we have learned better. Plants got killing dry. As part were used, the remainder shook about, lost the earth from the roots, and there was always a good percentage came home looking as if they "had been up all night" and a total loss. It is far better when within a mile or so of the cemetery to bring home the vases, at least the bowl that holds the plants. It is better in every way, for you have the whole greenhouse to choose from and there is no waste of plants, no broken pots or plants, or drying out that it will take them weeks to recover. We do the same with veranda boxes whenever they are no larger than four men can handle, for you can almost fill a six-foot box while you are looking out the plants if they had to be filled at the house.

Always cover the surface of vases and boxes with green wood moss. It is a background to the plants if there should be a bare spot or two. It acts as a mulch, preventing evaporation, and the roots of plants find their way into it. Altogether it is most desirable both for appearance and benefit to the plants, so don't say you can't get it or afford it. I will remind you once more that the soil used in the cramped conditions should be very rich to support six times the plants that you would put in a flower bed of the same area.

We have never yet found a plant so suitable or satisfactory for the center of a vase as the Dracaena indivisa. It thrives under the hardest treatment and grows stout and symmetrical with wind and sunshine. Cannas are often used, but they grow too tall and exhaust the soil so much that other plants are starved. Of all the palms, the only one suitable for the purpose is some of the phoenix. Latania, areca and kentia all burn, because it is impossible to keep them wet enough. Chamerops are fine for the purpose, but their price is out of the question in a three or four dollar vase.

Many vases, particularly for the cemetery, are now filled with one variety of geraniums, and very satisfactory they are. Perhaps a white variety round the edge with a pink center is the prettiest combination, and I know of several vases that always look fine that are filled with geraniums of seven or eight varieties. You can't go wrong in a good mix-up, but don't let the pink of Frances Perkins and the scarlet of Nutt be the only two or the effect will be most depressing. A vase of coleus looks well if kept well pinched and cared for, and so does a whole vase of Begonia Vernon.

A great many orders are: "Fill my vase with a nice mixture and plenty of vines." These vines, if the situation is windy, are simply a nuisance and soon get shabby, so unless the place is sheltered, persuade your customer to dispense with them. If you do use so-called vines, the hardiest only should be used. Of these the best of all are the vincas and English ivy, if bushy, and you are sure the vase will be kept well watered. There are several pretty things, among them lobelia, ivy geraniums, money vine, senecio, lophospermum, glechoma (particularly the variegated form of this weed), nasturtiums and several others, all good for veranda boxes and vases; but if in the sun and wind and neglected as to water, they soon get shabby and are anything but an ornament.

Pot Plants.

Decoration Day with us is more of a plant time than cut flowers; that is, the majority of people will take out a plant worth 25 or 50 cents rather than a ragged bunch of flowers. Remember that many visit the grave of a departed friend on this day. They have no opportunity to go there for months and they want to place something there, to them the sacred spot. In our beautiful Forest Lawn you are not allowed to disturb the sod, but a potted plant can be placed there and will be respected as long as it doesn't look shabby. Thousands of pots of geraniums are taken out, and here is where a well-grown four-inch plant with two or three flowers sells well at 20 cents each.

Many, of course, want something larger. Pans eight to twelve inches in size of pansies are greatly in demand, and best of all is the six to ten-inch size of azalea pots, with three or more well-flowered geraniums. People don't expect these plants to last long, but they do want something pretty and even showy, and you should make all the preparation you can for the business.

In another week we will be in the midst of our bedding business. I can only give you this advice: Don't let two or three wet days occur without firing up a little or much damage can be done. Fire with ventilators wide open and harden off all you possibly can.

CYCLAMEN FOR SEED.

By Paul Kopanka.

[Read before the Chicago Florists' Club, May 17.]

In response to the request made by the club at the last meeting, I have prepared the following on Cyclamen persicum. I am going to say something about the culture of cyclamen for seed in an extensive way. My experience is that the best time to sow the seeds so as to get strong plants for producing seed is during the months of August and September.

Sowing.

Make a preparation of soil containing two parts of leafmold, one part of peat and one part of very clean sand. Mix all up well and sift through a fine sieve. Take shallow pans, clean them thoroughly and fill to the top with the above mentioned soil. Press down very lightly and evenly and sow the seeds evenly but not too thickly. Cover seeds with a very light layer of this same soil by taking the sieve and sifting soil over the seeds. Press down lightly again and water with a fine rose. Put on top of each pan a sheet of blotting paper and from now on water only on top of the blotting paper. The blotting paper on top of the seeds has the advantage of keeping the pans evenly moist; the seeds will come up more evenly and there is no danger of overwatering or getting green moss or fungus on top.

If you have first class seeds they will sprout in three to four weeks. Label each pan with the name of the variety and the date of sowing of seed and keep all pans of the same variety together so that no mistake can occur when pricking out begins. Place the pans in a well shaded house near the glass. The temperature in August or September is hardly controllable. Give plenty of ventilation but avoid draughts and be careful not to allow the pans to get too dry. During the hot weather examine them twice a day to see whether they need water or not.

After three weeks take the blotting paper off. By this time the seeds will begin to have little bulbs and the first leaf will be formed. Be careful now and water only with a fine rose on the sprinkling can when necessary. After the little bulbs have made two leaves and the bulbs are fully out of the soil prepare shallow flats about two inches deep. Before using the flats whitewash them. Have plenty of holes in the bottom for drainage and put a very light layer of moss on the bottom. Fill the boxes with the same soil as was used in the pans, only add one part of very old rotted cow manure which looks almost like earth; press lightly down. Begin to prick out the little plants from the seed pans, planting in rows one-half inch apart and have the rows one inch apart. When all plants are pricked out place them in a house devoted only to cyclamen.

Cyclamen Houses.

The houses should be low two bench houses from two to three hundred feet long. The longer the houses are the easier it is to have good air in them and the floor in the houses should be made of brick, the supports of the benches of iron, the bottom of benches of slate. The slate benches when watered stay longer moist and cool the air, so the floor when syringed stays wet longer and also cools the air and gives the cyclamen a more favorable atmosphere. Give the cyclamen the most natural cultivation possible. The ventilation is preferred from the top to that from below. Water heating is also preferred to that by steam.

The supper room with guests at table.

Place the flats of plants on the slate benches. If slate benches cannot be had put the flats on the coarse gravel which has been put on the other benches. Leave the plants in flats until they have touched each others' leaves and no ground can be seen. It is of greater advantage to prick out the young plants in flats first and then put into little pots because the young plants out of the flats are much stronger, have larger bulbs and more and stronger roots. When planted in 2½-inch pots they will more quickly take hold of the soil and form a stronger bulb.

By this time the young plants will have reached the month of October or November. If the temperature goes below 50 degrees in October firing should begin to keep the temperature at 50 degrees at night because August and September being very warm it is very easy to check the young plants by low temperature and then all kinds of diseases will take hold of them as the young plants are very tender. Keep this temperature during November and December. On bright sunny days syringe the plants lightly over the foliage, keep walks well damped and give plenty of ventilation but avoid any direct draughts.

About the beginning of January begin to pot the little plants into 2½-inch pots with the same preparation of soil as that used in the flats, only leaving out the peat and adding one part of well rotted sods and sifting through a coarser sieve. Place on the slate benches, pot against pot, raise the temperature to 55 degrees and water only with the watering can. Shift the plants from 2½-inch to 3-inch when well rooted through.

It will now be about the month of March. Prepare the hotbeds for the cyclamen out of doors. Make a good layer of horse manure, let the manure get good and hot, take all the sash off, permit all ammonia to escape, put on a layer of very loose soil about six inches thick and put close to the glass. Plunge the 3-inch potted cyclamen in rows, the space between pots being from two to three inches. Put the sash on and shade the glass by whitewashing. Now very close attention to the hot-beds is required. When the sun is out give plenty of air by alternating the sash, one on top, next below. During dark and damp weather give a small crack of air. By this treatment the young plants will make a vigorous and compact growth, with large leaves on short stalks. If at night heavy frost should appear, cover all sash with boards; if the weather should be unsuitable in March prepare everything a month later.

When the plants are well rooted in the 3-inch pots repot into 4-inch pots with same preparation of soil as the 3-inch had, only adding a very little bone meal and coarse sand instead of fine sand. Plunge again into hotbeds without bottom heat, again near the glass. Now the plants will have reached May or June. Elevate the sash about two feet above the plants. Make a shade above the elevated sash by drawing a white cloth from one end of the frame to the other. From now on you may be liberal in watering and if carefully done use the half-inch hose. Syringe two to three times a day, both plants and surroundings. When again the 4-inch are thoroughly rooted through shift them into 5-inch pots with a preparation of soil, half leafmold, half old sods, one part old rotted cow manure, some coarse gravel and a little bonemeal. This to be all chopped up and well mixed. But it is not necessary to shift any more. Plunge again in hot-beds as described above but leave the sash off entirely and shade only with white cloth from 9 o'clock in the morning to 4 o'clock in the afternoon. If heavy rain is in sight put the sash on.

The last shift into 6-inch pots, will be in October or November. Before shifting select all the strongest and best plants from each variety you are going to raise seeds from. If the 5-inch are well rooted through, I mean if there is no more nourishment left, shift them into 6-inch pots so that half of the bulb is above and the other half below the ground. All the shifting should be done in this way.

Be careful to insure good drainage by putting broken crocks at the bottom of pots with still the same soil as 5-inch, but adding a larger portion of well-rotted cow manure. The nights are now starting to get cold and plants are already well hardened off; it is not advisable to leave them out in frames any longer. Before placing them in houses have the houses thoroughly clean. This being done, begin to place the 6-inch pots on benches, giving each pot plenty of room, so when the flowers form the seed pods and begin to hang down they will not lay on each other and commence to rot, and that the sun will also strike all the pods to ripen the seeds. When the plants come in full flower and the 6-inch pots are again well rooted through give them once each week a feeding of dissolved guano or liquid manure; this feeding will help them to develop larger flowers and also larger seeds.

The temperature at night will now be 40 degrees to 45 degrees, in daytime during dark, cold weather 50 degrees, with the admission of very little air, and in bright, sunny weather syringe the walks and foliage, but be careful not to syringe the flowers. The watering of the 6-inch pots should be done with the greatest care, only a watering can to be used, and do not use cold water. Have a barrel or two at the end of each house and fill at night with water to use for watering the following day, so that the water gets the house temperature. Well-grown cyclamen plants ought to have, when in 5 or 6-inch pots, 100 to 200 flowers per pot. Never syringe cyclamen when in full flower.

If fumigating is necessary fumigate before the cyclamen are in full bloom. If is advisable when the weather is warmer to partition off each variety by drawing white cloth through the space left between each variety, so that no insects or bees get the pollen of one variety on to that of the other, and it is a good thing to have white cloth or mosquito bars over the ventilators for the same reason. In this manner you can surely keep each variety true.

When all the stalks and seed pods are hanging down help them to get the right place around the pots, and if necessary elevate the pots by putting them on top of 5-inch pots turned upside down. It will perhaps be necessary to change temperature a few degrees higher or lower, which has to be judged by the growth of the plants.

In April or May the seeds will be getting, or already are, ripe, which depends upon the weather and sun. Watch carefully to see if a pod here and there is bursting; if this appears the harvest begins. Cut all the stalks off, near the bulb, spread a cloth on a table in a dry place where the sun strikes it, and the pods will all spring open and the seeds will lay on the cloth. There may be a number which will not open by themselves, so help them a little by rubbing between your hands. Separate the seeds from the stalks and empty pods. In separating the seeds the largest ones will be first-class, the next second-class, and the smallest the third-class. I prefer to always buy the first-class seeds, because they give the best plants.

By growing cyclamen in an extensive way I mean from two to five thousand 6-inch pots of each variety. It has slipped my memory how many plants are needed to produce a pound of cyclamen seeds, but it is still a well-paying business.

I will speak some time later of the sowing of cyclamen in February instead of August or September, and of propagating cyclamen only from eyes.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

The meeting of incorporators of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists under the new charter granted by Congress was held in Washington, May 14. President O'Mara presided, and after much deliberation a constitution and by-laws were adopted to meet the changed conditions.

There is but little change from the old set of laws, except in the method of nominating and electing officers and an article on "Co-operative Societies," which affects somewhat the membership of the Executive Committee. Under the new law nominations shall be made orally at the morning session of the second day and the election shall be by official ballots prepared according to the Australian form, containing the names of all candidates nominated for the various offices. The article on co-operative societies follows:

Any national state organization making application therefor whose aims and purposes are in harmony with the charter of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists may be enrolled as a co-operative society by an affirmative vote of this society.

Delegates.—Each duly enrolled co-operative society having a membership of 50 or more, of whom at least 25 are members in good standing of the S. A. F. O. H., shall be entitled to elect one delegate annually who shall serve for one year as a member of the Executive Board with all the rights, powers and privileges appertaining thereto.

Registration.—All registration of new plants by members of co-operative societies shall be effected through and by the office of the Secretary of the S. A. F. O. H., under the rules of said society. In case of dispute as to a name, it shall be referred to its special society for settlement, subject to the final approval of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists; and all legislative botanical, pathological, or entomological matters shall be referred to the regularly constituted committees and authorities of said society; any expense appertaining thereto to be paid by the S. A. F. O. H., subject to the approval of the Executive Board. The secretary of this society shall incorporate in his annual printed report of the proceedings of this society, such reports of said co-operative societies as may be furnished annually by the secretaries of said co-operative societies.

Support of Special Exhibitions.—The S. A. F. O. H. may pay at any time to any co-operative society holding a public floral or horticultural exhibition, in any part of the United States, such sum as may be voted by the Executive Board; said sum to be used in support of said exhibition; and may at the order of said Executive Board contribute premiums, medals or certificates as awards for new plants or flowers of American origin or other products of American skill deemed to be of special value to horticulture.

Rights Reserved to Co-Operative Societies.—The foregoing obligations and privileges shall not be held as in any way impairing the autonomy of regularly organized societies that may become parties to these provisions, or restricting their rights to self-government, otherwise than as specified herein.

The officers elected at the New York convention were re-elected under the new constitution and the members of the Executive Committee were reappointed to serve until their successors are appointed.

Those present at the meeting were: President P. O'Mara, Secretary W. J. Stewart, Treasurer H. B. Beatty, and Messrs. C. W. Ward, Lawrence Cotter, W. F. Gude, J. N. May, Robert Craig, Edwin Lonsdale, E. Buettner, James Dean, P. Welch, J. G. Esler, Wm. R. Smith, Benj. Durfee, W. G. Bertermann, Leonard Barron, Fred Mathison, A. Gude, P. Ganges, Alex Wallace, Wm. Fraser.

In the evening the visitors were entertained by a banquet at the Ebbitt House, tendered by Messrs. Benj. Durfee, W. R. Smith, W. F. Gude and J. H. Small, Jr. W. R. Smith acted as toastmaster and Hon. Amos Cummings, who was instrumental in getting the charter through Congress, was one of the guests. The speeches were all of a congratulatory order and Mr. W. R. Smith received many expressions of thanks for his earnest, continued effort in the matter of securing the charter.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

The Tulip Beds.

The illustrations are from photographs taken on the 9th of May. The beds were then at their best and all are the exhibit of F. R. Pierson, of Tarrytown. He used 42,000 tulips in six beds. The largest contained 13,000 bulbs, the next 10,000 and the remainder were in the other four. In the whole 42,000 there was scarcely a bulb but what was true to name and they must have been of the highest quality, for the flowers were uniformly fine. They were a revelation to all who saw them, and, as a man expressed it, "It was the greatest display of tulips ever seen outside of Holland."

One view shows in the background the Horticulture building on the left, the connecting conservatory, and on the right the Mines building. The Tower is seen over the top of the conservatory in the distance, 405 feet from the ground.

The view showing the standard and pyramid sweet bays was near the Women's building. This modest building was the only building on the grounds; formerly the Country Club. The four towers in the distance had at the time the photograph was taken the scaffolding still around them. They are surmounted by some grand statuary. Beneath them is a marvelous grotto 400 feet in length.

The other picture is the one containing the 13,000 bulbs. It may be of interest to those who plant bulbs in the fall to know that these were planted about the 1st of last December. The ground was then very wet. A blunt stick was used and the bulb was put down about five inches. I mention this because we saw other people preparing beds at great expense; excavating the soil, putting an inch of sand, placing the bulb, and then covering with four inches of earth. Of course, the great majority of gardeners know that that is very old-fashioned and entirely an old fogy notion. Late planted bulbs are more satisfactory than earlier ones. I believe the later you plant before frost sets in the better.

The varieties sent by Mr. Pierson were Wapin von Leyden, white striped; Coleur Ponceau, cherry and white; Rachel Rush, a pink; Alba Regalis, a fine stout white; Cottage Maid, perhaps the best of all the pinks; the well-known Kaiserskroon; La Immaculte, a fine white, but drops its petals too early; Artus, the brilliant little scarlet; Brutus, a beautiful crimson; Chrysolora, perhaps the best of all yellows; Duchess de Parma, orange and red; Crimson King, a large crimson; Standard Royal Silver, a beautiful striped; and Yellow Prince. Altogether these beds have made a most magnificent display.

I may add, while describing this section of the grounds, that since the photographs were taken many choice evergreens, Dracena Indivisa, Catalpa Bungeii, Russian Mulberry, and other trees, have been planted on the margins of the roads. Altogether it is a grand and attractive spot.

Dedication Day.

Dedication day was a great day in the history of Buffalo. The excitement, the mob, the parade and other features made you think it was a magnified Fourth of July and it would be all over in the morning, but there is five months more of it and we hope we will be able to endure it. The papers say over 100,000 people entered the gates. I shou'd have thought there were many more. The daily press will give you an account of the many celebrities who were here, from the vice president of the United States upwards and downwards. Multi-millionaires and fierce looking senors from South America, poor but proud. The parade was a gorgeous affair. The clearing up and finishing touches went on at a great rate and the whole place was in fine order.

I am glad to say that the fine portion of the grounds given up to outside horticultural exhibits, the most beautiful spot on the grounds, is in perfect order and was greatly admired by many thousands. The tulips still made the grounds gay. Since my last notes there has been added to the exhibit seventy-five specimen evergreens by Thos. Meehan & Sons, of Germantown, Pa., which fit in finely. Bobbink & Atkins occupy a large space with many choice specimens. It is a grand exhibit. F. R. Pierson has sent another carload of sweet bays, evergreens, rhododendrons, palms and other fine plants. Mr. Pierson has most generously loaned the New York state building a number of fine plants to decorate this marble palace for the season.

Mr. J. D. Ei-ele paid us a visit on Sunday to look over the many exhibits of the big firm of Henry A. Dreer. They made a fine exhibit of palms and ferns in the center of the horticulture building. It is a fine position and when complete will add much to the finish of this fine building. The Dreer booth in the north conservatory is a very ornamental affair and makes a fine appearance as well as being a good exposition of their varied line.

The Rose Show.

The rose exhibition was a great attraction and almost all arrived in the best order. The awards will not be published for a few days. There were no poor flowers and many were of great excellence. The Queen of Edgely were the best samples the writer has yet seen. Flowers up to date have been received from John H. Dunlop, Toronto; the H. Dale Estate, Brampton, Ont.; C. T. Guenther, Hamburg, N. Y.; S. J. Reuter, Westerly, R. I.; Benjamin Dorrance, Dorranceton, Pa.; W. J. Lawrence, Mimico, Ont.; American Rose Co., Washington, D. C.; Peter Crowe, Utica, N. Y.; George E. Fancourt, Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Lake View Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y.; W. J. Palmer & Son, Buffalo; S. A. Anderson, Buffalo; Floral Exchange, Philadelphia; Florham Farms, Madison, N. J., a notable exhibit from the latter establishment being 100 blooms of a magnificent yellow carnation, a perfect flower with a great stem, named Miss Aubrey Campbell.

Mr. Ulrich is hard at work getting out the bedding plants in the many courts. There are some beautiful displays of pansies in the Grand Court. When the vases are filled and the many spots destined for flowers are filled up it must be a most beautiful picture.

The Paeony Show.

The dates set for the show of peonies, May 28 to June 7, would in ordinary seasons have suited the majority of growers throughout the country, but on account of the very late season these dates will find few paeonies open. Without changing the dates we will be very glad whenever a grower has flowers that he wishes to exhibit to receive them at any time, and they will be judged as soon as received.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

NEW YORK.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Club was very well attended, and many faces were there that are too seldom seen. President Sheridan occupied the chair. The ways and means committee, in reporting progress, stated that they had received two prizes of $50 each from Samuel Thorne and Lawrence Hafner for the October show. The exhibition, through J. W. Withers, reported that prospects were very bright for the grand show in Madison Square Garden. Schedules had been sent out and any one requiring a copy could have same by notifying him at 136 Liberty street. On motion of Mr. O'Mara, a copy of the schedule will be sent to the officers of every horticultural and floricultural society in America. Mr. Langjahr, of the summer outing committee, stated that Locust Point was being considered as a suitable place to take the crowd the second week in July; the committee was empowered to make arrangements. Mr. May, as delegate to the meeting of the Chrysanthemum Society, informed the club that he had been given nothing but encouragement for the New York show.

A committee on transportation to Buffalo was then appointed. This consists of Messrs. Langjahr, Withers, Burnham, Herrington, and Butterfield. On a call being made as to who present intended going, almost the entire assemblage arose. There will undoubtedly be a very large crowd go from here to see the Midway near the Falls. Messrs. Cotter, Welch and Mathison, of Boston, on their way to attend the corporate meeting of the S. A. F. at Washington, were very welcome visitors at the club's meeting, and on being asked to give his opinion of New York, Mr. Cotter said the magnitude of the city left him nothing to say. Messrs. Welch and Mathison, speaking for Boston, paid high tribute to the achievements of the New York Florists' Club and the metropolis of the country; they said it was the city which commanded the eyes of the world, and floriculturally speaking the eyes of the country were turned to the city of New York.

Mr. James Dean, on being asked to say a few words, said the last three or four years were the hardest he ever experienced, for without his range of glass and stock of plants to care for, he was like a fish out of water. He spoke feelingly of his old place at Bay Ridge, of the drawbacks of the business, of its lights and shadows; he hoped for the day when his son would be able to manage a place when he would once again be among his pet plants (and those present hoped that, too). He said they were going to Washington to do something to elevate the profession, and asked those around him for ideas that would help them. Mr. O'Mara said that there was no calculating the vast amount of good that would result from the future working of the national society; it was, he felt, destined to benefit not only the trade, but the private gardeners and all connected with the growing of plant or flower.

Mr. Henshaw, having just returned from a trip to the West Indies, gave some interesting stories of life there. The market of Guadulope was the poorest he ever saw. $10 would buy the entire stock of fruits and vegetables for sale there; Barbadoes was a beggar town; Demarara was of much interest to plant-men. At the Botanical Gardens there he saw the finest lot of palms he ever saw, whilst all kinds of magnificent water plants grew in the canals, which ran through each street. At Carona Falls he saw 21 varieties of begonias growing on one rock, and on the Blue Mountain at Jamaica he found several almost extinct plants, among which was an immense patch of Fuchsia gracilis. He recommended the West Indies to any one wishing a winter trip.

Messrs. Stewart, Butterfield, Plumb and Lucas entertained the meeting with songs and stories, and the house committee worked hard to quench the fires of thirst. J. H. Troy had on exhibition several varieties of Hedera arborea, and a vase of Azalea ledifolium, for which the awards committee gave him honorable mention.

The condition of business could be much worse, in fact it is expected to be so when outdoor flowers come in.

An Exhibition.

A two days' flower and plant show was given by the Horticultural Society of New York, and the New York Botanical Society in the Museum of the Gardens at Bronx Park, May 8 and 9. Some very interesting exhibits were arranged. Competition was not very keen, but the basement floor of the large hall was well filled. Several good prizes were offered, and Siebrecht & Son, of New Rochelle, captured most of them. They won first in collection of ferns, group of crotons, group of palms, foliage and flowering group, collections of shrubs, nepenthes, bromeliads, and second for six orchids in bloom.

P. Onwerkerk, of Jersey City, showed a group of very choice and well-grown conifers; J. H. Troy also put up a very large and interesting display of shrubs and a batch of Azalea Firefly; F. D. Thompson, of Prospect Park, sent a group of choice palms, and won first with his collection of daffodils. In the competition for a $50 prize for greatest novelty there were three aspirants. H. A. Dreer, of Riverton and Philadelphia, showed a fine specimen of their grand novelty Pandanus Sanderi, J. H. Troy a collection of Hedera arborea or tree ivies, and Arthur Herrington a plant and vase of flowers of the Barbarton daisy, Gerbera Jamesoni. Mr. Herrington captured the prize with his exhibit; this flower has splendid qualities and should be better known here; it is fine for decorative work; the color is very attractive.

C. Weinberg, Woodside, L. I., won first with a remarkable collection of cacti, he having some 325 varieties on the table. The Botanical Gardens won first in collection of flowering shrubs and second in daffodils. J. Roehrs, Carlton Hill, N. J., was awarded first for six orchids in flower; they were fine. The Agassiz Association, of Bedford, put up a most pleasing and instructive exhibit of wild flowers. This association consists of four young children; their exhibit was one of the best in the hall and well deserved the first prize it was awarded. Special awards were given to a group of caleoolarias by Alex. McKenzie, of Cedarhurst, and H. T. Clinkaberry, of Trenton, for collection of cypripediums.

On the afternoon of the first day C. Van Brunt gave an illustrated lecture on cultivated plants. The annual meeting of the Horticultural Society was held the same afternoon and the old officers were re-elected.

A rose and strawberry show will be given the 12th of June in the same place and it is expected that if the American Rose Society does not hold their show in Newport they may give it at Bronx Park. For a first attempt this show was a success and the management hopes to make future semi-annual exhibitions worthy of the city. Admission was free and quite a crowd attended. The Botanical Gardens are well worth a visit. J. L. D.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market is in poor shape; one must do a good business now to earn a small amount of money. Decoration Day comes next week; from that time until the commencements and weddings are over, business in this line is apt to be much better than at present.

It does not always denote poverty of resources when the weather is spoken of or written about; sometimes the weather deserves attention. This is the case at present. Several nights this week the mercury has hovered around 50 degrees Fahrenheit at 3 a. m. (Not a nighthawk; only an unfortunate heating experiment!) This unusual chilliness has kept back the planting out season. The orders are in, however, and stock is being rapidly sold. A very encouraging demand is noticed for the choicer sorts of plants. Crotons for June 1 delivery are popular; Pandanus Veitchii for vases and porch decorations are going well. For the same purpose Hydrangea Otaksa not too far advanced, is wanted, and so on with a number of other showy foliage and flowering plants of choice sorts nicely grown.

There is rather a paucity of decorative material to draw upon at present; a few Hydrangea Otaksa in sizes at $3 to $4 a dozen are useful. Then the popular taste for natural effects is causing a growing demand for dogwood branches, apple blossoms and other seasonable material that can be effectively used in decorating. Lilacs are everywhere and rather shunned by the regular dealers in consequence. Sweet peas are the subject of conversation when the growers meet. Just how high the vines and how forward the buds is of deep interest. A fine crop of these popular flowers seems assured for next month.

Various Items.

One of our hustling retailers went to church on Sunday, not Easter Sunday, and heard the sixth chapter of St. Matthew which gives a part of the sermon on the mount. "Take therefore no thought for the morrow for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." He said it was one of the best things ever written for those who worry needlessly.

Griffin Bros., of Frankford, have a fine lot of well grown bedding stock; they have done verbenas nicely.

The Moorestown Floral Co., Edward M. Harris, manager, report a good season. They grow a miscellaneous collection of plants including a number of carnations in pots.

William J. Young, Jr., School and Pulaski streets, Germantown, has a neatly kept place that is an object lesson to his customers. Mrs. Frances Joost has done well here and will be more largely grown next season. There is a fine lot of bedding plants on hand.

Moonvines are becoming scarce. Godfrey Aschmann had 10,000; they are all gone. The size was largely 4-inch, the price $8 per 100; there were a few carried over plants at $25 per 100.

Harry Weiss, of Hatboro, has had a good season with Brides and Maids. He will grow besides these roses, a few carnations next season.

Charles W. Cox, Second and Bristol streets, has found a good demand for Kaiserins in 3-inch this spring.

Ladies' Night at the club last week was well attended.

John Westcott and friends are active at Waretown these days.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society meeting was held on Tuesday. There were essays by last month's successful exhibitors and an exhibition of geraniums, cauliflower, etc.

The really successful retailer in our large cities must combine integrity, industry and ability, both artistic and business. He must also have a thorough knowledge of men and be quick in using it. The following story of an attractive young man who conducts one of our stores will illustrate this point. A quiet looking man dropped in and explained to this retailer that a friend of his daughter's was going to have a tea and that he wanted to send her a few flowers. "I suppose," he added, "she will be getting some of those things," pointing to a vase of chrysanthemums on the counter; "how would they do?" "Yes, she will receive lots of chrysanthemums," was the instant reply. "But they are not for you to send. Let me make you up a shower bouquet of orchids. I will give it my personal attention, and I assure you the young lady will have nothing like it." The quiet man was startled. He knew orchids came high; still was he not successful in business and the subtle flattery conveyed in the words "not for you to send" was soothing. The order for the shower bouquet of orchids was given.

When the quiet man entered the room at a certain tea the young lady who was receiving instantly left her mother's side and came tripping over to meet him with, "Oh, Mr. X, I want to thank you so much for that exquisite shower bouquet you have sent me." It was in a place of honor by itself, while all the other flowers were banked together on the other side of the room.

Trade Conditions.

There is not a stickful of sensible reading in the whole thing! There has been a good sized supply of everything seasonable and a fairly well-developed demand for it, but not enough to keep a large amount off the street and prices have been small all along the line.

Would anything definite on that point be of any value to you? Well, American Beauty roses have been selling at all the way from 50 cents to $4 per dozen, Liberties 50 cents to $3, Meteors and Brunners 25 cents to $1, and there has been a large surplus of all kinds of red roses which went upon the street at 1 to 6 cents, most of them having poor blossoms.

The Jacqueminot rose has not cut its usual figure with us this spring and is not now in evidence. Pink and white roses have been running at from 25 cents to $1.25 per dozen with quite a heavy street surplus. Pinks 50 cents to $1.50 per 100, with a light surplus during the week (May 13 to 19). Violets are very few as are also the people looking for them, at from 25 cents to 75 cents per. Tulips and a few Jonquils covers about the whole field of bulb material. These are not plenty, the price is small, but the demand is still smaller. The supply of spirea, candytuft, mignonette, etc., is not too heavy to clean up in the markets at just a fair price.

Sweet peas? They began coming in very irregularly a long time ago and have been very gradually increasing ever since till a very few days ago when they suddenly became quite plentiful. The price has now been forced down to 50 and 75 cents. Their quality has been extra good so far, handles a foot long and as big as a slate pencil being grown upon some of them. Pansies, too. Now down to 25. Green material now plentiful enough at pretty good figures.

Various Items.

The schoolmaster who taught me to write (or rather who dismally failed to do so must be looked up and fined heavily. He makes my item about Geo. and Arthur Delaney in last week's issue read incorrectly, as well as being responsible for a few other similar errors during the past score of moons or so.

Bert Leavitt, Welch Brothers' right-hand man, is in bad condition physically as the result of a fall at his home. He has been away from the store for two or three weeks and there is no immediate hope for his return.

I omitted to speak of M. B. Bunker's new store last week. The building occupied by him on Beacon street is soon to be torn down so he has removed to a fine location on City Hall avenue where his courteous manner and knowledge of business can hardly fail to draw a good degree of patronage from the constantly passing crowds.

Monday morning, May 20, just in time for me to make a note of it before mailing, comes the news of the death of Bert Leavitt, spoken of above. Blood poison set in as the result of a broken arm at the time of the fall and produced this result at the city hospital, where he was taken some two weeks since.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The supply of all stock is still large, but prices are a trifle firmer in tone on the best grades, though weaker on the poor qualities, which last form an enlarging proportion of the stock received. For several days the weather has been dark, gloomy and rainy as well as cool, and this naturally has not benefited the plants. For the best Brides and Maids $5 is about the top price, though we hear of a few specials bringing $6. The best Gates go as high as $8 and Liberties up to $10. But the great bulk of fair quality teas go at $3 to $4 and the great quantities of culls sell at as low as 50 cents to $1. The best Beauties still hold up to $3 a dozen, but there are very few of them and the poorest are sold at as low as $2 a hundred, with all sorts of prices in between.

In carnations a few extra fancy bring $3, but very fine flowers can be had at $1.50 to $2, with good ones at $1 to $1.25, and odds and ends in big lots are cleaned up at 40 to 75 cents.

Paeonies are moving very well at $5 for good stock, but the poor don't go at all. Parrot tulips sell fairly well at $4, but the other sorts are apparently not wanted. Iris can't be given away. We are in the middle of the lilac season and it goes very well at moderate prices.

The demand concentrates more and more on the best grades of everything, and the difference in prices of the best and the poorest is becoming wider all the time. It is rare that there is a surplus of really extra grade stock, but a surplus of poor quality stuff seems to now be always with us.

Local demand is very light and were it not for the shipping trade the market would be very badly demoralized indeed.

The lily situation has materially improved and good blooms are now quoted at $8 to $10. The latter price will prevail for Decoration Day.

The supply for Decoration Day promises to be sufficient to meet the usual demand, but quality will probably not be up to the usual standard unless weather conditions change very quickly.

Club Meeting.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club last Friday evening Mr. Paul Kopanka's paper on growing the cyclamen for seed, which appears elsewhere in this issue, was read and discussed. The general feeling among the growers seemed to be that the cyclamen was not a profitable plant to grow for this market, as buyers would not pay an adequate price for finely grown plants. Mr. August Jurgens, who formerly grew quite a number, has practically abandoned their culture for that reason. The paper, however, was found very interesting and the thanks of the club were voted Mr. Kopanka for his essay. Little else but routine business was transacted.

At the bowling session after the meeting Mr. John Reardon developed unexpected power and passed up to the 150 class, making one score of 163. Ed Winterson's best was 184. But the main interest now centers in the league games on Tuesday nights.

Various Items.

Kennicott Bros. Co. are receiving some very fine longiflorum lilies from Klehm's Nurseries and will have a big lot of them for Decoration Day.

McKellar and Winterson have just received a lot of new baskets from Germany and have materially strengthened their line of supplies for Commencement and Decoration Day demands.

E. H. Hunt is receiving some extra grade lily of the valley and will have some heavy consignments of it for Decoration Day. This place is being fitted throughout with new electric lights.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. are now established in their enlarged quarters in the basement of what should really be known as the Cut Flower building, as it now contains no less than eleven wholesale florists.

Recently reported reductions in the price of glass must have been based upon erroneous conclusions. Glass of the 10x24 double A grade is still quoted in the neighborhood of $7.00 a box. The lowest quotation one large buyer of glass could get on Tuesday was $6.48 a box in large lots.

Walter Kreitling & Co. put up a very pretty decoration at the Chicago Club last Saturday when Mr. James Deering entertained the French Ambassador, M. Cambon, at dinner. There were 36 covers and the table was set in the form of a square. The inner edges of the tables were studded with red and white electric lights and from these edges there sloped to the center a supporting frame work covered with hardy fern fronds, and in the center was a huge circle of yellow variegated parrot tulips which surrounded a fountain containing gold fish. At each corner of the inner square was laid a flag of red and white carnations and blue corn flowers, two American and two French. Between these were placed loose bunches of red paconies. On the tables was a tracery of Sprengeri and apple blossoms. Over the table was a huge canopy of lilac, white and purple mixed. The effect was excellent. The price of the decoration was $200.

F. Blondeel has succeeded to the business of F. Grosse & Co., at Oak Park.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. recently received a large importation of kentias and araucarias of large sizes and they arrived in excellent condition.

C. C. Pollworth, Milwaukee, was a visitor last Monday.

The failure of August Dressel seems to have been complete and Mr. Dressel has the sympathy of many friends in the trade. At the auction sale of the stock held last week very moderate prices were realized and it is feared there will be little for unsecured creditors. It is certainly a very unfortunate conclusion of a long business experience and a life of hard work. A side venture in the brick business is partly responsible for present conditions.

Mrs. E. F. Winterson has been confined to her home by illness for some time and seems to make little progress toward restoration to her usual good health.

Bowling.

The third series in the league contest was played last Tuesday evening and the scores follow. Some very remarkable spares were made by Ed. Winterson, Chas. Balluff and Geo. Asmus that drew tumultuous applause from professionals present. In these games the Wholesalers won from the Retailers and the Growers took a heavy fall out of the Seedsmen. None of those dollar prizes for 200 scores were won, though G. Stollery came within one pin of one.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

There is little change in the trade since my last writing. Stock is as plentiful as ever and the prices are still going down; the quality is poor on account of the warm weather. The cut of roses and carnations during the past month has been enormous.

In roses the best Meteors, Brides and Maids are sold at $3 per 100, and from that down to $1. Only a very few choice ones are now coming in and the second grade stock is very plentiful and about at your own price.

Carnations are still very fine and of good color. White and Daybreak are about the best sellers; of the other varieties, plenty are going to waste. Price of fancies is $1.50 per 100; good stock, $1, and common grades, 50 cents per 100. All can be bought cheaper in 1000 lots.

Paconies are coming in now and are sold from $4 to $5. Dark red are the only ones in at this writing. Sweet peas are good in quality and color and are bringing from 50 cents down to 25 cents per 100. Cornflowers, at 25 cents per 100, have little call, though very good. Good valley brings $3, but is not plentiful.

It is said that Decoration Day prices will go into effect May 27, but if the stock is as plentiful as it is at present, prices will not go up much.

St. Louis Free From Fakirs.

Mayor Wells has done a good thing for the legitimate florists who pay store rent. He has ordered all fakirs kept off the streets and we are now free from the class that call themselves "street florists." Though this is not to the liking of the wholesaler, who now has no outlet for his surplus, I think it will benefit all three—the grower, retailer and wholesaler—alike. Now the grower who sends in rubbish will get nothing for it, while for those who send in first class stock the wholesaler will be able to dispose of all of it at a good fair price, and the retailer will be able to charge a good price for his stock over the counter. I think we have all gained much by the action of the mayor, and a vote of thanks should be sent him for his good work in this direction.

No doubt the Florists' Club will take the matter up at its next regular meeting, and we hope that every member of our club will attend this meeting, if only to sign his name to the vote of thanks.

Now that the St. Louis florists are rid of the fakir on the street, the next question to be taken up is the "crape puller," with which we are now overrun. This crape-pulling has been practiced of late by some firms that we thought were our best. Some of these "pullers" offer to make a twenty-two inch pillow for $2, and enough cut flowers for the inside of the casket thrown in. A florist of our city has in his possession a bunch of cards left by various florists at the home of a friend, who had lost his mother, and it was a great surprise to read the names of florists whom we least expected would stoop to the low practice of "crape-pulling," and their names should be read before the Florists' Club at the June meeting. Many of these "crape-pullers" buy second-hand wire work gathered from the cemeteries. This matter should also be taken up and stopped, if possible, as the officials of the different cemeteries throughout the city don't seem to know that the stuff is being sold and the money pocketed by the help.

Various Items.

Arthur Blome was in town last week selling the famous Nephrolepis Wittboldii for the George Wittbold Company, of Chicago. Mr. Blome reports great sales on this plant.

Carew Sanders has been confined to his bed with sickness the past week. From last reports he was improving and expects to be out in a week or so.

Arnold Scheidegger, of Kirkwood, is building two new houses, and Hugo Gross, of the same place, is building three new houses, all to be 25x100. They grow only violets and carnations for the trade.

W. E. Jordan, successor to the Jordan Floral Company, on Easton avenue, has the place in good shape for the planting season. Business of late has been good; he is selling a good deal of his stock at wholesale. Willie is assisted in the business by his wife.

F. C. Weber celebrated his fifty-fourth birthday anniversary last Monday night at his home, entertaining his euchre club. The affair passed off in a very pleasant way.

Charlie Kuehn and Arthur Ellison are members of the Brunswick Bowling club and are playing in a summer league in which their club is in the lead. Both are doing some fine bowling.

A recent visit to George Wundie's place, on Delore avenue, found the place looking in fine shape. George and his brother were hard at work. Great credit must be given these young men for their earnest endeavor to make their place a paying one.

Mr. Wm. Bouche has just finished the flower beds in front of the union station and the flower boxes around the roof garden. The place looks better than ever before.

The flower stands in the Union market are in full bloom and attract a great deal of attention from the great crowds that daily throng this place. Business here is very active and all varieties are meeting with ready sale.

Shaw Banquet.

The twelfth annual banquet to the trustees of the Missouri Botanical Garden was given at the Southern Hotel on last Saturday night. The sum of $1,000 is annually set apart in the will of the late Henry Shaw to defray the expenses. Fifty-five guests were present, including the members of the board of trustees.

Dr. E. A. Engler was toastmaster and the following gentlemen spoke: Mr. Henry Hitchcock, Prof. Calvin M. Woodward, Mayor Rolla Wells, Isaac H. Lionberger, Mr. Herman von Schrenk and Dr. C. H. Patton. The decorations were elaborate and tastefully arranged.

Yesterday (Sunday) the Shaw flower sermon was preached at Christ Church. The church was tastefully decorated with plants from the Shaw garden. This is an annual sermon which is in accordance with the will of the late Henry Shaw.

Bowling.

The attendance at the last meeting of the bowling club was better and the members from now on will come down more regular and try to put up some good scores in order to represent St. Louis at Buffalo this summer, and if we can get the team together, we expect to make them all hustle to win out. The scores last night were somewhat better than the last, but not what they should be. The scores were as follows:

	1	2	3	4	Tot.	Av.
A. Y. Ellison	155	169	141	172	637	159

The Market.

Business has been fair this week and cut flowers were never so plentiful before. Carnations can hardly be given away and were never so cheap as the present time. Good inside roses still command a good price, but are somewhat scarce.

President McKinley and party are with us and are being entertained in true California style. The cheap florists got the decorations of the city and made a cheap job of it.

Prices.

Prices: American Beauties, 50 cents to $2; Brides, Maids, Meteors, 15 to 50 cents; Cecil Brunners, 6¼ cents; Carnots, 15 to 25 cents; Kaiserins, 25 to 75 cents; Siebrechts, 15 to 25 cents. Carnations—Hobart, $1; Crocker, 25 to 50 cents; mixed fancy, 15 to 50 cents; Bradt, 20 to 35 cents; Nugget, 25 cents; Scott, 5 to 15 cents per doz.; Portia, 50 to 75 cents per 100. Harrisii, $1 to $2; sweet peas, 50 to 75 cents per doz.; smilax, 5 cents; asparagus, 10 cents per string.

Trade Notes.

Domoto Bros., Fruitvale, will grow 40,000 inside chrysanthemums for the coming season.

E. Gill, Oakland, has received some very large shipping orders for cut flowers for Decoration Day.

Wm. Nunenmacher, Piedmont, received a new addition to his family on May 6. Billy says it's a girl—I wonder if he is sure.

Kiyow & Co., San Francisco, will grow 5,000 chrysanthemums, Queen and Bonnaffon, this year. This firm is bringing in some very fine lilies at present.

State Exhibition.

The California State Floral Society held its spring exhibition on May 16, 17 and 18 in the northern end of the Ferry building, San Francisco. The show was a splendid success in every way. Although not quite up to former exhibitions in the number of exhibits, the excellence of the various displays was certainly ahead of anything ever seen in San Francisco.

The carnation exhibit made by John H. Sievers & Co. was simply wonderful and it was well worth the price of admission alone to see what can be accomplished in carnation culture. Six new seedlings shown by this firm were of the Hobart type: Mrs. F. Carlan, a very fine shell pink with a splendid calyx; No. 14, a fine scarlet; R. Raymond, salmon pink; Jennie Gifford, rose; Mrs. McKinley, a beautiful dark pink; A. B. Spreckels, a beautiful red. The above six carnations took first premium for best six varieties.

The Golden Gate Park made a fine display of caladiums, not for competition, that were much admired.

Domoto Bros., 1st premium for best pair palms; 1st premium for best pair aspidistras.

C. C. Abrams, Western Nursery, potted plants and pansies not for competition.

F. Ludemann made a fine exhibit of palms, Boston ferns and Pandanus Veitchii, not for competition.

R. Spreckels, 1st premium for pelargoniums and best six carnations.

Berkeley University exhibited gloxinias, not for competition.

Domoto Bros., 1st premium for best twenty-five decorative plants; 1st premium for variegated foliage plants.

E. Gill, 1st premium for largest and best collection of outside roses. Special premium for display of new seedling roses. First premium for cut sprays of flowering shrubbery and ornamental trees. The exhibit was much admired by the public.

Wm. Chandler, 1st premium for wild flowers.

Wm. Sachau, 1st premium for cut flowers, mixed roses, cinerarias and cacti.

James Bell, Berkeley, outside roses, not for competition.

H. Melde, Eureka, wild azaleas. This exhibit was very attractive.

Mrs. Fenton, delphiniums, not for competition.

Luther Burbank, Shasta daisies, colum-

F. A. Carlson, thyme in pots.

J. C. Love, 1st premium for best six ferns.

J. A. Carbone, Berkeley, 1st premiums for Lilium Harrisii, for largest and best collection of inside roses and for six best roses in six varieties.

E. Schwerin made a splendid display of pot-grown ferns that were much admired. Also Bougainvillaea glabra.

Frank Pelicano & Co., 1st premium for best rose exhibit and 1st premium for rose and carnation. This exhibit made a very fine table. J. N.

KEEP THEM GOING.

One step won't take you very far—you've got to keep on walking;
One word won't tell folks who you are—you've got to keep on talking;
One inch won't grow you very tall—you've got to keep on growing;
One little "ad" won't do it all—you've got to keep them going.

Richmond, Ind.—Mr. Vernon Graves, one of our leading florists, had the misfortune to have a fire at his home May 11. The barn on the premises took fire from some unknown cause and was completely destroyed, together with the contents. One horse and a cow were cremated and a second horse was so badly burned that he was killed. Four or five tons of hay, seventy-five bushels of corn and other material of this character was burned. A large quantity of prepared lumber for new greenhouses in process of construction had been stored in the barn temporarily and this was also destroyed. The loss will probably be between $1,000 and $1,200; partly covered by insurance.

Muncie, Ind.—Fred W. Meyer, formerly of Richmond, Ind., has purchased the greenhouses and business of George Kendall and will continue it. Mr. Kendall retires from business owing to poor health.

Bennington, Vt.—W. G. Richardson has sold his stock and leased his greenhouses to L. C. Holton.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—The Huddart Floral Co. is arranging to build a new house and to rebuild two old ones.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

A Weeping Chrysanthemum named Pioneer is one of eleven seedlings from a cross between Eva Knowles and Viscountess Hambledon, raised by Mr. Austen, Ditting Court, Maidstone. The peculiarity of all eleven plants consisted in the downward geotropic direction of the branches, which were bent downwards like those of a weeping ash, but upturned heliotropic at the ends, when flowers were produced. This peculiar habit would render the plant very useful for certain decorative purposes. No cause could be assigned by the members of the R. H. S. Scientific Committee for the drooping tendency.

Hybrid Moss Rose Crimson Globe:—This is a great acquisition to the moss roses, as it possesses the qualities of an exhibition flower, combined with the true moss characteristics. The buds are nicely mossed, while the flowers, which are of a deep crimson color, are large and well formed, and the growth is very vigorous. Moss roses have become very popular, and at some of the rose shows substantial prizes are offered for them. Not being very strong growers they succeed well in comparatively shallow soil, providing they are well mulched with short manure and frequently watered during summer.

Propagation of Chrysanthemums from stock plants that have been grown in open beds and borders without the use of stimulating fertilizers is, we are pleased to see, becoming general. Many years ago when Mr. George Gordon, in these pages, directed the attention of cultivators to the absolute necessity of propagating chrysanthemums from hardily-grown stock plants instead of from the highly-fed plethoric examples grown for the supply of exhibition blooms, but few growers were prepared to accept the recommendation. The advice has, however, borne an abundant harvest, for during the period that has elapsed the practice has been completely changed, and is generally adopted by the trade growers.

Trade and Personal Notes.

A little rain has at last relieved the dry spell and all outdoor stock looks much refreshed. Hardy flowers, snowballs, iris, etc., are in full force, and it is but the hope of the florist that they will be over before Decoration Day. There was a pretty heavy frost the first of last week, but it did no damage. The nights have been very cool and carnations have been benefited.

Decoration Day is growing more and more to be a first-class day with the florists, especially when outdoor flowers are over. This year the prospects are especially good. The glut of carnations, which has been with us for nearly two weeks, will be over and first-class prices will be realized. Roses, although poor, will be in fair supply.

The past week has seen a slight reduction in the amount of stock coming in, but there was still more than enough and prices showed very little tendency to rise until Saturday, when they stiffened slightly.

Saturday afternoon the Jabez Elliott flower market was loaded with flowers and plants. The sale of plants was especially good and all the boys are kept busy bedding. Well-flowered geraniums are scarce.

Mr. R. A. Murphy is just recovering from a broken rib and dislocated shoulder. He fell from a scaffold, striking a barrel which was standing beneath.

Mrs. Henry Schwarz has been very sick, but is now slowly recovering. Mr. Schwarz is about to move his establishment from Price Hill to Norwood, where he has purchased grounds. He is building a residence and will erect a range of houses there during the early summer.

Mrs. Lodder and Miss Mary Lodder, of Hamilton, O., are spending a few weeks at West Baden, Ind.

Mr. Oliver Murphy has left the employ of his mother, Mrs. R. J. Murphy, and is with Klus Bros., Anderson, Ind.

Mr. Sidney Murphy has dissolved partnership with Mrs. R. J. Murphy and will start up for himself. He belongs to the rising generation and we all wish him the best of fortune, especially since it is rumored that he will shortly take a partner, and a life partner, too.

Friday evening Mr. Herman Schlachter, wishing to get some flowers from his cellar, discovered that some thieves had pried open the door and made a clean sweep, taking everything in sight, even to a half-dozen potted roses. As they were his stock for Saturday's market, Mr. Schlachter felt the loss considerably.

Mr. William G. Bertermann, president-elect of the American Carnation Society, was in this city Saturday evening on his way to Indianapolis from Washington, D. C., where he had attended the meeting of the S. A. F. O. H. committee on incorporation. He reports that everything was working smoothly. The proposed amalgamation of the leading national florists' societies under one head was discussed.

In speaking of the coming meeting of the Carnation Society, Mr. Bertermann is very enthusiastic. He promises great things and thinks that the West will have a few things to show that will open the eyes of the Eastern florists.

IT PAYS.

Some one has suggested that "with customary American extravagance, home gardening is approaching a luxury the world has never known before." Magazine editors, keen judges of public interest, have sought out a splendid array of lavishly illustrated articles on gardening, outdoor topics, and home decoration, both exterior and interior.

The widespread growth of interest in the movement for town and neighborhood improvement has been one of the notable developments of the last decade, and public beauty will doubtless be the dominating idea of the twentieth century. Many of our social problems are in large degree questions of environment, and hence the attainment of more salutary conditions in this connection will greatly simplify their solution.

The National League of Improvement Associations was formed to meet the growing general demand for information concerning organized effort for the promotion of home beautifying. Its history has been marked by a nation-wide increase of interest in public beauty and by an unprecedentedly large business on the part of those who have for sale that which will assist in making America "the most beautiful country in the world."

Organized purely as an educational movement the League has proved a decidedly successful business "boomer." Already special campaigning in a given city has resulted in the sale of the entire stock of every local florist. The League plans, agitates and organizes. It unites newspapers, school people and influential citizens in a way that awakens interest in every home. This interest causes a demand for plants, seeds, bulbs and supplies.

To the "trade" the League is an investment, not a charity, and a proposition to support it is purely a business matter. An organization formed for similar purposes among manufacturers is largely supported by prominent firms whose efforts are thus brought to the attention of an interested public. The suggestion, then, is offered to the readers that in common with some hundreds of seedsmen, florists, nurserymen and supply dealers, they unite in sending subscriptions toward the financial support of the League. Without doubt these amounts may, if need be, be made payable in two installments.

Acting as your agent the League invests in a national campaign of education and agitation. To this end the League prepares booklet, magazine and leaflet issues; provides lectures and lantern slides for towns and assemblies; secures the organization of local leagues, and the enlistment of commercial bodies and public spirited citizens. This varied effort results in hundreds of press articles, scores of meetings and lectures, and dozens of active societies, all working together to create new demands for your stock. "It pays," one business man says.

Expended by the League in this fashion your money nets several hundred per cent more of profitable publicity than you can secure by any direct method. Every dollar invested increases the dividends of every dollar put in. Hence it is to the advantage of all concerned to have the co-operation of the entire trade in your city. Will you not urge them to join with you? Now is the seed time for the early harvest.

E. G. Routzahn, Sec'y.
Springfield, O.

THE ROSE.

(From "Hassan Ben Khaled")

Then took the generous host
A basket filled with roses. Every guest
Cried, "Give me roses!" and he thus addressed
His words to all: "He who exalts them most
In song, he only shall the roses wear."
Then sang a guest: "The rose's cheeks are fair;
It crowns the purple bowl, and no one knows
If the rose colors it, or it the rose."
And sang another: "Crimson is its hue,
And on its breast the morning's crystal dew
Is changed to rubies." Then a third replied:
"It blushes in the sun's enamored sight,
As a young virgin on her wedding night,
When from her face the bridegroom lifts the veil."
When all had sung their songs, I, Hassan, tried,
"The rose," I sang, "is either red or pale,
Like maidens whom the flame of passion burns,
And love or jealousy controls, by turns.
Its buds are lips preparing for a kiss;
Its open flowers are like the blush of bliss
On lovers' cheeks; the thorns its armor are,
And in its center shines a golden star,
As on a favorite's cheek a sequin glows;—
And thus the garden's favorite is the rose."
The master from his open basket shook

A local daily prints a picture of a proposed floral arch for the Templars' Conclave that will be quite remarkable if the idea can be carried out. Here is part of the description:

Flowers and plants will play the principal parts in the make-up of the arch. Not an inch of wood or metal, beyond the figures of the horses and knights at each of the four corners, will be seen. The distance from the center of the street intersection to the top of the dome will be forty feet. Rising from the dome a "prismatic" fountain will throw a spray of water fifteen feet into the air. Four columns rising from the corners of the sidewalks will start from bases eight by eight feet in dimensions. It will take 5,000 plants to decorate the arch and 1,000 incandescent lamps to illuminate it.

"The entire background for the surface of the arch will be in green," said Mr. Bolton, "and it is interesting to know how this surface is made. A month or six weeks before the conclave I would select a level lot and make it clean as a floor. Over this I would lay squares of wire mesh, cut about two feet by two. A coating of earth and manure to the depth of an inch or more will be sprinkled over the wire square and on this grass or plant seeds will be sown. Then another thin coating of earth is added and the seeds are left to sprout. By careful watering the grass or small plants grow rapidly. Roots shoot down quickly and wind around the wires in the mesh and in a short time the entire square is in condition to be lifted and carried about at will.

"These squares will be pegged or nailed to the wood work of the arch and there you have your surface of green. The crosses, crowns and panels of the arch will be made in growing plants and flowers. These will be attached to the structure by hooks surrounding each pot and fastened to the wood work. Copings to the piers and friezes to the arches will likewise be formed in rows of flowers and plants. The dome of the arch will probably be made out of a bed of palms.

"The 'prismatic' fountain will be one of the wonders of the arch. This is a good deal on the order of the 'electric fountain.' The water will be thrown to a height of fully fifteen feet. At night the fountain will naturally present the finest appearance. Vari-colored electric lights will be hidden beneath the dome with powerful reflectors behind them casting rays of light into the water overhead."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

There is very little special decorating done here on Decoration Day. The Grand Army posts take care of the soldiers' graves with flowers and wreaths which they make themselves.

The principal decoration that we do is for the militia, for their past officers, who have gone, for which we make up large showy designs each year. They have no special design, varying them each year. Outside of that our trade runs mostly to simple basket work and loose cut flowers, except in a very few cases when we have had to make huge bunches to cover the entire grave; these have been made sometimes of large hydrangea blooms, others have been made of lilies, some roses, etc., but usually of the larger and more effective flowers. M. A.

RICHMOND, VA.

Decoration Day is not what it was formerly to the florists here. In times past they worked all the preceding night and it was looked forward to. Now it comes and goes and leaves no impression on the bank accounts, except with one or two of the largest plant growers. They do the most trade and Decoration Day about cleans up the "soft stuff," as they term it. Oakwood memorial has come and gone and it is doubtful if as much as $300 was spent with florists. May 30 is the next and biggest day. The florists hope it may be an improvement over past years, but from a cut flower standpoint it cuts little figure. O.

Nephrolepis Wittboldii

AT the left is a plant of N. Wittboldii lifted from the bench. After being photographed 40 runners were taken from this plant and potted up. It is even more prolific than the well-known Boston fern. It has not only greatly added beauty and grace but possesses every characteristic necessary to make it a money maker for the small as well as large grower. It produces with remarkable freedom, grows quickly into a fine specimen and as a house plant is fully as tough and lasting as N. Bostoniensis.

YOU NEED IT IN YOUR BUSINESS.

We are offering fine plants, ready for 3 and 4-inch pots at $1.00 each, $10.00 per doz., $75.00 per 100. The demand will be immense next year and you ought to have a stock ready.

BUFFALO HOTELS.

The Buffalo Florists' Club have undertaken to arrange for the accommodation of all visitors who expect to attend the convention of the S. A. F. in Buffalo.

While it is true that hotel rates will be higher than usual, there are any number of apartment houses that have been fitted out for the accommodation of Pan-American visitors; also private houses in the residence portion of the city, where rooms can be had for $1 and up for each person, and in many breakfast will be served if desired, while other places will give all meals, the latter not so plentiful.

The hotel committee have a list of houses and hotels with the rates, and any person or persons wishing to engage rooms can have same secured in advance by addressing the chairman of the committee, W. A. Adams, 479 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y., stating whether they want accommodations at hotel, apartment or private house, with or without breakfast, and the number of persons desiring accommodations together. It will be necessary to inform the committee early, as they have the refusal of several apartments for the week, where from one hundred to one hundred and fifty can be accommodated in one place.

It will be unnecessary to communicate with W. J. Stewart, secretary of the S. A. F., as the executive committee look to the Buffalo Club to accommodate the visitors, which the hotel committee are willing to do, providing they are notified in time.

Street car facilities are excellent, the restaurants plentiful and rates reasonable. No one will be overcharged at any place, and with the above desirable apartments and private houses every one will be taken care of if they notify the committee in time.

THE COMMITTEE.

CHICAGO TO BUFFALO.

The Chicago Florists' Club has instructed the committee appointed to arrange for transportation to the convention of the Society of American Florists at Buffalo next August, to issue an announcement to the members and the trade in general that it hopes to secure especially advantageous terms and accommodations this year and that the larger the party the better the chances of securing the greatest consideration from the transportation lines.

The annual convention of the S. A. F. and the Pan-American Exposition combined will no doubt prove a great drawing card and the attendance will unquestionably be large.

If it could be known definitely in advance just about how many will compose the party from Chicago, so the committee could name an approximate number with some degree of certainty, it would materially strengthen them in their efforts to secure the largest possible concessions.

Will you therefore notify the committee—

First—Whether you are reasonably certain of attending the convention and intend traveling with the club's special party?

Second—Whether you hope to join the party but are uncertain of being able to do so?

Third—Whether you have made up your mind that you cannot attend this year?

Please address reply to any one of the committee as below.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Various Items.

The unsettled condition of the weather is becoming very disheartening; not satisfied with being cold and raw, last Saturday it commenced to rain and is still raining, with rain predicted for tomorrow, Wednesday, a day set for a society outdoor lilac wedding. Peter Kunst who has the bedding plants, vases, etc., in charge has this part of the work completed, while Crabb & Hunter have the wedding decorations, and now it looks as if all things movable will have to come indoors.

The death of Edwin F. Uhl, ex-mayor, ex-ambassador to Italy, etc., furnished the occasion for a lavish use of flowers. The Floral Company had the family order, while every florist had a share of the designs and sprays, making this the largest floral funeral of the season.

Flowers are very plentiful, a few roses, seconds, even going to waste; but so far carnations have been pretty well cleaned up, and if this weather continues a few days longer there will be a scarcity for Decoration Day, as usual. Lilacs will be gone, as well as most flowering shrubs except snowballs and paeonies. Most of the florists have grown a few longiflorums for Decoration Day to help out, and it looks as though they will come in handy. Carnations are 35 cents per dozen; roses, $1; outside valley, 50 cents per doz.; longiflorums, $1.25 per doz.; lilacs, 25 cents per doz.; bulbs all gone.

James Schols is now improving rapidly and hopes to be able to be about in a few days.

Eli Cross has one of the finest crops of cucumbers ever seen in this section.

The wedding of the season was the Barstow-Phelps. Crabb & Hunter had both the church and the home decorations and they were the most elaborate ever seen in Grand Rapids.

Our visitors this week were Mr. Minnie, of Eaton Rapids, Mich., and the Knapp Bros., of St. Johns, Mich.

MILWAUKEE.

Business was unusually quiet when it should have been brisk, considering the quantity of stock on the market. Sales were slow and it was difficult to obtain respectable prices, even on fine stock, probably due to the immense variety of stock on hand and the large percentage of seconds and culls. Country buyers must also have their crops on, for shipping business is somewhat unsteady. Carnations went anywhere from 50 cents to $2 per 100, but good stock lingered around the $1 mark most of the week. Roses ranged from $1 to $6 per 100, but only extra select brought top price. White stock was the weakest on the market, calls being for colored mostly. Decoration Day trade will retrieve the present state, as advance orders are coming in lively.
